INTRODUCTION

(for Part 17 — The Last Pagan Techno-Clerics)

There are books in this series that descend into darkness, some that pry open sealed vaults, and others that chase ghosts across the circuitry of history. But this one — this one belongs to the forgotten bridge between worlds. The Last Pagan Techno-Clerics is not a metaphor, not a symbol, not a poetic label for ancient priests or modern programmers. It is a literal map of the hybrid orders that once existed and still echo beneath the surface of our digital civilizations: the mystics who learned how to speak to machines, the engineers who still carried shrines in their pockets, the monks who coded prayers into the first networks, and the quiet hands who preserved the last embers of pre-Christian, pre-imperial, pre-colonial spiritual technologies when the world convulsed into modernity.

This book stands at the intersection where myth bleeds into circuitry and where the “pagan” label finally collapses under the weight of its own distortion. Here, the word means something closer to the unbroken line of Earth-bound knowledge, the cosmologies that survived empires, inquisitions, libraries burned, and languages erased. It refers to the orders that refused to die — and instead reappeared within the electric age disguised as hobbyists, archivists, ham-radio zealots, occult engineers, folklore coders, fringe technologists, and the anonymous guardians who built early internet sanctuaries under pseudonyms no one will ever identify.

You are not reading about fantasy. You are reading about the forgotten operating system beneath our world — one built by hands who remembered the old gods while wiring the new.

Every page in this book is a recovery, a confession, a transmission. And by the time you reach the final paragraphs, you’ll understand why the world had to forget these clerics... and why their return marks the next phase of the Sigillum Mundi.

Generation XXX – Another Descent: 4plebs /x/ Dump as Unfiltered Record

As this book nears its final threshold, what follows is not mine. The final ~100 pages are a raw, unedited archive dump—sourced directly from the 4plebs /x/ board, specifically its most recent explorations into the paranormal, metaphysical, and fringe esoterica. This is not commentary, not interpretation, not filtered through any system, philosophy, or belief. It is pure record. The words, images, and anomalies contained in the following section belong to anonymous voices echoing through the digital wilderness—preserved as-is to ensure nothing is lost. Some of these fragments may be disturbing, brilliant, incoherent, prophetic, cruel, or revelatory. But they remain intact because, in this moment, documentation matters more than explanation. Treat this final descent as a primary source for future generations—uncurated chaos from the digital underworld—meant to be studied, questioned, integrated, or ignored, but never censored. And let it be clear: none of the words that follow are my own.

Yeah, no. Tone is subjective and impossible to accurately convey to others, which is why it is ignored.

>someone eager to be believed will recount as accurately as possible

Did that individual seem eager to be believed? He explicitly stated he didn't care if he was believed or not. For someone intelligent, failing a basic reading test isn't a good sign.

As I understand it, JFK had a personal interest in UFOs going back to shortly after WW2, when he served as Forrestal's aide for a time. Forrestal was one of the leading figures in MJ-12, and evidently, he had leaked information to Kennedy, who was also getting information from members of Congress. Kennedy also had a personal relationship with Marilyn Monroe, a woman who had intimate relations with a number of powerful men in Washington. Forrestal purportedly killed himself in 1949. It is likely he was defenestrated, as this was used on Frank Olsen suffered a similar fate. Pic related states the death of Forrestal was necessary but regrettable. Monroe died in 1962 under mysterious circumstances. Kennedy angered the CIA over the Bay of Pigs and inadvertently gave them the ability to authorize assassinations without any oversight. Kennedy's increasing belligerence towards the CIA and defense establishment angered many. In 1961, Dulles appears to have initiated preparations for assassinating Kennedy, but was fired shortly after. Dulles' successor was a former AEC chairman, and the Department of Energy was the primary custodian of UFO tech. This was likely unknown to Kennedy. In 1962, Kennedy was briefed more fully by MJ-12 during the Cuban Missile Crisis. In 1963, Kennedy seemingly went rogue and decided to begin joint cooperation with the USSR for space exploration and on a moon landing program, which would endanger relations with nonhuman intelligence on the moon. In response, McCone executed Dulles' contingency plan, which used MJ-12 and CIA/FBI assets with the help of MIC actors to kill Kennedy. LBJ was put in place as a figurehead and cancelled all of Kennedy's plans for cooperation with the Soviets.

>the CIA an enemy of humanity?

The CIA is simply a formalized government version of what already existed before. It was created by and for the usage of occult and internationalist groups, i.e., freemasons, banking families, oil moguls, Jews, etc. The president who authorized it was a freemason; it was led by multiple OSS veterans who had all first funnelled money to Nazi Germany, helped Jews in Nazi Germany, and then had spied against Nazi Germany during the war. The CIA is a component of MJ-12, but the entirety of MJ-12 is the military-industrial complex, which is conveniently led by the same class of people. If I had to guess, Dulles and others knew about UFOs long before the government did and played it against itself like a puppeteer, funnelling money, reverse-engineered tech, and resources to the elites for their own uses. Kennedy was not the leader of the United States; he was merely allowed to believe he was. When Kennedy threatened to expose UFOs, the hostile nature of the entities MJ-12 was in contact with, but also the entire deep state apparatus by proxy, MJ-12 killed Kennedy. I'll let the words of Dulles' right-hand man speak for themselves:

>With no emotion in his voice, but with his hand trembling, Angleton replied: "Fundamentally, the founding fathers of U.S. intelligence were liars. The better you lied and the more you betrayed, the more likely you would be promoted. These people attracted and promoted each other. Outside of their duplicity, the only thing they had in common was a desire for absolute power. I did things that, in looking back on my life, I regret. But I was part of it and I loved being in it... Allen Dulles, Richard Helms, Carmel Offie, and Frank Wisner were the grand masters. If you were in a room with them you were in a room full of people that you had to believe would deservedly end up in hell." Angleton slowly sipped his tea and then said, "I guess I will see them there soon."

"In the spring of 1988 I saw a magazine that made reference to a document discovered by the research team of Moore, Shandera, and Friedman that outlined the government's knowledge of a downed saucer, dead alien bodies, and an operation called Operation MAJESTIC TWELVE. I knew that Moore and Friedman were government agents and the document was a fraud. I had never heard of Shandera. "Within MAJESTYTWELVE is Operation Majority justifying the plan by presenting an extraterrestrial threat as the reason for the necessity for world government ala "Who speaks for planet Earth... Argentina?" Exactly the manner in which Stanton T. Friedman ends his UFOs Are Real lectures. They believe in the government and thus believe the extraterrestrial lie. These dupes do not know that the Illuminati are the aliens who plan to destroy the United States of America in any event. The natural skepticism of reporters insures that anyone who believes in extraterrestrial visitation or who links the so-called alien threat with the coming world government will be ridiculed and discredited. When I saw Operation Majority while serving in the Navy I believed the alien threat was real just like everyone else. It was not until I had performed many years of research that I was able to fully understand exactly what it was that I had seen. It was extremely difficult for me to believe that my government and the United States Navy had used me, especially since I had dedicated my life to government and military service. Most government and military personnel cannot and will not believe such and idea. The plan is real. The extraterrestrial threat is artificial. The threat is presented through the use of secret technology originally developed by the Germans in their secret weapons programs during WW-II, by geniuses like Nikola Tesla, and many others. Military and government personnel who have access to this material believe it is real.

The text in the letter is a response to a request for a copy of a document. The document is titled "SECRET FILE" and is related to the investigation of a murder. The letter states that the document was not sent to the recipient, and it was sent to the White House. The letter also mentions that the recipient was not contacted by the White House. The letter concludes with a request for the recipient to provide a review of the document.

The handwritten notes in the letter are not fully legible due to the resolution of the image. The handwriting appears to be in a cursive style, but the details are not clear enough to be accurately transcribed. The letter is signed by Susan Kade, who is presumably the author of the letter, and it is addressed to Mr. Timothy Cooper, who is presumably the recipient of the document. The letter is a formal response to a request for a copy of a document, and it is dated "June 21, 1999" and signed by Susan Kade. The man who sent it in was CIA under Angleton; he was part of the burn team destroying Angleton's files after his dismissal and removed it from a burn barrel. You can believe it or not, but there's no plausible reason to create such a damning document as disinfo, and it being a hoax is unlikely because the sender's handwriting matches a known CIA agent who did work for Angleton. Believe it or not, your choice, the sender's other info is quite authentic.

The image is a black and white photograph of a document with a worn and aged appearance. The document is partially obscured by a dark, possibly smeared area, which obscures the top left corner and the bottom right corner. The text on the document is in a language that appears to be Latin or a related script, and it is written in a serif font. The text is not fully legible due to the wear and tear, but it seems to be a historical or official document. The top right corner of the document has a small, dark mark or mark, which could be a signature or a mark of some sort. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical documents or records, with a focus on the text and the worn appearance of the paper.

Yeah, the rest of Angleton's files. In any case, I expect it was only in the fire for a few seconds before the guy noticed "MJ-12" stamped on it and yanked it out of there.

>Kalaris now instigated an investigation into Angleton's filing system. His team found "entire sets of vaults and sealed rooms scattered all around the second and third floors of CIA headquarters". They came across over 40 safes, some of them had not been opened for over ten years. No one on Angleton's remaining staff knew what was in them and no one had the combinations anymore. Kalaris was forced to call in a "crack team of safebusters to drill open the door". The investigators found "Angleton's own most super-sensitive files, memoranda, notes and letters... tapes, photographs" and according to Kalaris "bizarre things of which I shall never ever speak".

Only 0.5% of Angleton's files were retained.

They didn't. Did you read what I said or what the sender said? He said he "literally snatched" the directives from the fire to prevent their destruction, if I had to guess, because most of the CIAs MJ-12 docs were destroyed after Richard Nixon ordered it, but Angleton, whose staff were compartmentalized from the rest of the CIA kept that as a memento or blackmail or for some other purpose and he was the only one who knew it still existed.

I don't think you understand what the CI department was like under Angleton. It was its own independent agency with its own staff. Its members were hand-picked by Angleton and reported only to him and not to any other part of the CIA. When Angleton was dismissed, he probably ordered his most sensitive files destroyed by his subordinates, who removed them from the safes and burned them themselves, probably without clearance. Angleton's subordinate realized what they were burning and took at least this one file, perhaps more, during that process, as there are other Angleton MJ-12 files that show no sign of damage. The anecdote about Kalaris is just to show what kind of thing we're dealing with, not that he was the one who was burning that document.

The burners were more than likely his subordinates. They most likely didn't have clearance to mess with his stuff. However the subordinates did have clearance to hire a safe drilling team, and those safe drillers had clearance to enter CIA and work on the safe. Then, without clearance, they went down to the burning room, or a back alley behind the CIA building and started burning loads of papers. A guard may have asked what they were doing, they responded with "we have clearance" and the guard waved them off. It was a bright white, glistening light that floated away from the mark, and hummed gently. It faded away after a minute or so, like the lights slowly lost power or something.

No idea wtf it was at the time. My family and I just thought it might've just been a dud firework, but this picture looks just like what I saw that night.

>They most likely didn't have clearance to mess with his stuff. However the subordinates did have clearance to hire a safe drilling team, and those safe drillers had clearance to enter CIA and work on the safe.

Clearly, you don't understand what I'm saying. The guy who sent the document was one of Angleton's subordinates and he took the file when Angleton's staff was burning his documents off the record. Kalaris was Angleton's replacement as head of the CI staff, and he brought in his own team to open up Angleton's files and was ordered to destroy all but 0.5% of them. The file was likely taken prior to Kalaris even showing up.

>Then, without clearance, they went down to the burning room, or a back alley behind the CIA building and started burning loads of papers.

They didn't need clearance; the CI staff likely had their own areas for document destruction. The only person they could get clearance from was Angleton, and he was gone. The only reason they would've been burning his files was if he ordered them to, which he could easily do with a phone call from his house.

>They got down to only 0.5% of the job left before they noticed :surprise pikachu face: they were about UFOs

No, the guy who sent the letter already knew about UFOs. I know this because he provided a very detailed history of MJ-12 going back to the 40s. By 1974, all MJ-12 documentation should have been destroyed; that's the reason the leaker snatched the document, because he realized he had a chance to save at least some of the documents. If you actually read the document, you'll notice it's an early draft with some typos; that's because the draft may have been given to Angleton's staff for destruction, where he instead took it as potential blackmail. This really isn't crazy or outlandish, so I'm not sure why you're so adamant that the people who had access to all CIA files for counterintelligence could've snatched sensitive documents in the process of being destroyed.

Ok smart guy, can you explain why the CIA would create an incredibly sensitive and damaging file as disinfo? Can you imagine what would have happened had that file been given to Congress during the assassination hearings? What would the CIA have said? "We faked it?" or "No such organization exists?" I'm sure the director would love to explain why they created a fake document stating Allen Dulles wanted to assassinate Kennedy when the CIA already publically stated they were innocent. Make it make sense.

This figure is composed of numerous small, triangular pieces that are arranged in a way that forms a recognizable shape, reminiscent of a diamond or a similar crystal formation. The figure is surrounded by a multitude of smaller, similar triangular pieces, creating a sense of symmetry and order.

I had an wild lucid dream today. I was captured by alien craft, you know rounder kind saucer shit. I was consumed by its bright light and in a moment i was on the orbit inside the craft. I didnt meet any occupants of the craft. I was in the rounded room which looked like somekind of source of power. Room was bright marine blueish and it was rounded with blue energy sources or crystals. I started to panic and i noclipped in to the void. Also Earth was pretty close but i didnt seem like you see in the pictures.

Literally no human on planet Earth would do this for a genuine clip, there's a line of

That crosses it.

There is no human that is both retarded enough to do this for a genuine clip, while also being smart enough to technically generate the clip.

The image is a still from a video, captured in black and white, and appears to be a still image from a video that was recorded on a date of 8/8/2008. The image shows a curved object with a reflective surface, possibly a mirror or a lens, with a slight blur around the edges. The object is positioned in the center of the frame, and the background is dark, suggesting it is taken in a low-light environment. The date "3:54:27 AM" is displayed in the bottom right corner of the image, indicating the time the video was recorded. The style of the image is reminiscent of surveillance or security footage, with a focus on the object and its reflective surface.

The image is a composite of multiple photographs, each showing a different view of a UFO. The UFO is captured in the center of the image, with its shape and size clearly visible. The photograph is taken from a distance, and the UFO appears to be hovering in the sky. The time stamp at the top of the image indicates that the photo was taken at 3:54 AM on June 8, 2008.

The photographs are arranged in a grid format, with the top row showing the first photograph, the middle row showing the second photograph, and the bottom row showing the third photograph. Each photograph is a close-up view of the UFO, with the focus on the object's underside. The background of each photograph is dark, which contrasts with the bright light of the UFO, making it stand out.

The image does not contain any discernible text or additional elements that provide context or information about the UFO or the event captured in the photograph. The style of the image is a standard photograph with a focus on the UFO, and the composition is straightforward, with the UFO as the central subject.

The image is a photograph that captures a cityscape viewed from an elevated perspective. The city is densely populated with tall buildings, predominantly in shades of gray and white, with some structures featuring a mix of these colors. The buildings are closely packed together, suggesting a dense urban environment.

In the foreground, there is a large, intricate, and detailed structure that resembles a stylized representation of a spaceship or a spaceship-like structure. This structure is composed of numerous small, interconnected elements that give it a complex and intricate appearance. The design is symmetrical, with a central point that is the focal point of the image.

The background of the image reveals a vast expanse of water, which appears to be a large body of water, possibly a lake or a sea, with a clear blue sky above. The water's surface is calm, and the horizon line is visible, suggesting that the city is situated near a body of water.

The photograph is taken during the day, and the lighting is bright, illuminating the city and the water, creating a contrast between the urban environment and the natural landscape. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the architectural details of the city and the natural beauty of the water.

modern space force era invisibility camouflage is just a chilled space medium, the very medium astronauts float within while in space, just in and around you. Think of the chilled space medium as like clear water in a clear plastic bag, but the space medium is much smaller per particle than clear h₂o water. The chilled space medium fits in between all your smallest animal cell parts, and light reflects from one end of you, through you, and to the other side of you.

This character is seated at a desk with a computer monitor in front of them. On the right, there is a character with a small head, wearing a striped shirt and a baseball cap backwards, with a speech bubble that says "No one is going to give you the education you need to overthrow them." This character is also seated at a desk with a computer monitor in front of them. The background is plain and white, with a faint outline of a black line at the top and bottom of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a classic comic strip, with a focus on the characters and their dialogue.

The image is a close-up photograph of a person's face, which appears to be a man, with a significant amount of blood on his face and neck. The blood is red and appears to be fresh, suggesting recent injury. The person's eyes are closed, and his mouth is slightly open, possibly due to the impact of the injury. The person is wearing a dark-colored shirt and has a visible earring.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "It's all so tiresome." The text is in white and is capitalized, which stands out against the darker background of the image. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a casual setting, possibly a social media post or a meme. The overall tone of the image is serious and somber, reflecting the seriousness of the injury and the accompanying text.

For me, it's Dave Rosenfled's sightings at UTTR in 2004. The best documented UAP sighting you have never heard of, unless you were alive in 2004 and read about on particular USAF project that got blown wide open by the SF Gate. Dave has pictures and everything, and was even interviewed by the local Fox Affiliate about it. They even called UTTR about it, who offhandedly confirmed something was going on (but fuck you on what)

This. Especially when you learn that Richard Bissell literally requested a fake manual for the U-2 spy plane from Lockheed. It was then artificially aged and Bissell "ensured" it fell into the hands of Russian intelligence. As far as the MJ-12 documents, I believe that some of them are real and some is false. Either way, they give everyone a place to look (but no one does). These aren't DoD projects, they were Atomic Energy Commission projects run jointly with the US Navy. Everyone looks to the DoD, but these are all DoE projects. They hide all of it under the guise of the Atomic Energy Act.

This is true, but several MJ-12 documents would hurt the CIA and American credibility far more than misleading the Russians. The main misinformation strategy was fooling them into thinking we were testing aircraft lightyears ahead of anything they did, and that UFO sightings were primarily these craft. Pic related is very interesting for misinformation because the blue lab is a real place that Senator Goldwater tried and was denied access to.

It just seems overly reductive. The nascent human ego is a familiar phenomenon, it doesn't need to be incarnated into a physical space to be real.

Every time someone tries to locate a phenomenon in the flesh, it has been a source of error. The left-right reduction sets up a duality that overly simplifies an incredibly complex and adaptable system.

Is it possible to escape this disgusting reality? I've wanted to for as long as I can remember. Eventually, I came to think it was impossible outside of old fairy tales. I considered the path of a Buddhist monk, but that's too difficult, even though I've had some success with meditation. Damn, I want to leave this world right now. I would give a lot for that journey, even if it's just another dream. I'm tired of this illusion.

[4 / 1]The image is a black and white halftone dot-matrix print, featuring a stylized representation of a bird with wings. The bird is depicted with a stylized, abstract design, with its wings spread out and its body forming a semi-circle. The wings are detailed with sharp, pointed tips and a textured appearance, giving the impression of feathers. The bird's body is elongated and forms a semi-circle, with the wings extending outward from the body. The image is monochromatic, with the bird's body and wings in black, and the background in white. There are no discernible texts or additional objects within the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of halftone dot-matrix prints, which are commonly used for printing on paper.

What if the angels come down and harvest their face but leave the rest to wander the land with no face?

Anonymous Thu 20 Nov 2025 22:36:53 No.41530496 Report

The face taking angels don't actually cut off your face and wear it like some ghoul. When they "take" a face from someone, they are simply using that person's likeness as a mask. The purpose is to confront them with someone wearing "their own" face, as an educational tool to help them understand that the shapes and forms that made their face not only have always existed, but are not exclusively theirs. They're trying to help you divorce your ego from your material, human body. Angels are all shapeshifters, yes they have forms as described in the bible, but these are forms they take to make a point to humanity for God. This is another example of shapeshifting to make a point and help deliver God's messages.

I had a strange moment right now. I was not asleep and not awake (can't tell) and my brain started thinking. 'You have to be aware of the overall message that god has for you in life' my brain being aware of that then decided to observe life itself from an outside and overall perspective. My body started shaking as it did that. It tried twice but at the second time I thought that something was trying to enter in my right ear and I checked but found nothing (I was sleeping sideways). Foolishly I started analyzing and looking for words to try to describe that here to you instead of proceeding on meditating on the feeling and thought. The weird thing is that that thought just came to me in the night barely ruminating thoughts in that state. Is this a possible attempt at possession or I just unlocked something?. Lately I've been discovering things about the mind and under pressure so I don't know what to think. Maybe I discovered and controlled for a bit the language the brain and mind obeys (it's like a vibe) words and abstract reasoning (contextual) seem to have an effect on me.

Nah I've probably thought about the message myself. It seems that when I ruminate at night I touch a lot of small topics. I get reduced to my minimal parts and such. Its like concentrating awareness on a single part of the mind and such but on a feeling and thoughts instead. The details, I've been atomized. The thing... It was like an attempt on control by my mind over conscience. And the conscience was trying to protect itself.

I have a bad habit of leaving things to god. Of trying to inspect things from outside from an broad holistic perspective. At the moment when the thing happened life felt cheap and trivially faint like just a passing thought. That gave the green light for my consciousness to try to separate itself from the mind. It seems that I can control mental states at will but I don't know how. Does anybody know about this?. Thoughts and emotions are connected to consciousness.

I went to the biggest considered largest river-sea island on the planet, located on Pará one of most fucked up state of my country, it used to be beautiful like 30ys ago, but some reagions have nice rivers that still nice to swim on it, since I live in Brasil my family likes to do some trips around our country and in this trip I brought myself a binoculars so I could watch over the rivers while I stayed in the Hotel, one day I was trying to spot some jaguars or any kind of cool animal, but instead I was met with some really weird shit, in the rivers u can see a bunch of boats running here and there, some of them are js local fishers and the other part are tourist boats on trips with their guides or locals doin nothing so they js chill on the river, ofc I know the Amazon rivers are usually known for havin a bunch of illegal shit happening on them, drug dealers use them all the time to smuggle drugs, guns, etc.. or prospectors using it to carry ilegal gold, mined from illegal operations, I don't really want to get into trouble so I don't report nothing but from now and then some suspicious boats traveled in the region, but this day was different, back some years ago it was reported abt child trafficking in the state region, I didn't thought it was that big of deal so I thought it was something rare to happen.

>lookin over the river trying to spot alligators around 200m of distance >kids on boats start sailing next to a speedboat.

>not a regular boat made of wood, ppl inside looked wealthy >kids around the age of 12, 10, 7, 6

>a guy leans against the railing of the boat.
>the oldest kid starts talkin to the guy >after some talk they shake hands as if they have sealed an agreement >kids starts to enter in the boat other dudes show up and help them get inside >the youngest one starts crying as if he doesn't want to go.
>after a while, the older girl convinces him to go inside can't belive what I js saw, never going back there again

Mindfulness meditation done right acts as dual n-back training for the brain, increasing it's interconnectivity and IQ. Remember what you mean to be thinking, feeling, finding, etc., and remember what you just thought that interrupted that, what you just felt, what you just found. You can step it a step further for better brain training and any influences that you find in either one that you can use psychically to motivate your thinking (good ideas, positive vibes, etc.) you can remember too.

The most forward part of the prefrontal cortex allows one to set aside ideas to remember to contemplate later because other more pressing issues enter ones mind. I can improve this in you by planting brain cells in you and others. This and aiding the other functions that particular part of your prefrontal cortex can do is a great combination with quality time spent meditating on being mindful.

Mantra chanting can shift brain activity from high-frequency beta waves to calming alpha and theta waves. Studies have found an increase in alpha and theta power during mantra practice.

Brain region activity: It can lead to decreased activity in the amygdala, a brain region involved in processing stress and fear. Additionally, it can deactivate the default mode network, which is often overactive in stressful states.

Functional changes: Research has shown changes in functional connectivity within the brain, particularly in areas related to attention and stress.

The default mode network and malfunctions in it can lead to maladaptive daydreaming as well, so mantra chanting can decrease that as well. So can mindfulness meditation.

Do not fear that mindfulness meditation can look similar to maladaptive day dreaming in the mind. The mechanism by which the visions and sensations appear to you is important, as some are healthier than others.

Mindfulness meditation is better than regular dual n-back training because it also teaches you better proprioception and other perceptive abilities, teaches you better introspection, and (unless you will otherwise) better empathy with others. If you include your perception of your face in your mind and what it's doing, the expression on it and why it's there, you can get better at reading the faces of others. It's not hard to think of ways to step up your meditation friends.

Anonymous Tue 18 Nov 2025 16:08:47 No.41515719 Report

It was a success when I set out at 5 to program that I'd meditate awake and asleep every day of my life, for though I didn't refer to it as mindfulness meditation, and it has some slight differences such as causing brain cell death and birth that set it apart, I've been doing the same sort of dual n-back training that mindfulness meditation provides but more intense every single moment of my life since I was 5 without a single moment exempted. I've meditated every moment of my life since I decided to and destroyed many of my brain cells to fate it so.

No wonder my brain has shown such growth. I destroyed almost half of it falling from my tree, and since then it's grown in to fill most of my skull once more. I've still got room to grow though, I needed room to breathe.

This is a very obvious psyop going around but I can't figure out the meaning behind it or what its purpose could be. It's got gen alpha kids and young zoomers finding synchronicities in their everyday life and they've been finding it in media now too. It's kinda like we do with number like 33 119/911 etc.

Ofc $6+7=13$ which is a very classic number but there's gotta be something more to this I ain't smart enough to figure out. Thoughts?

The image is a meme featuring two separate panels. The top panel shows a cartoon-style illustration of a man with a bald head, wearing sunglasses and a red tank top. He is holding a red cloth to his head, and his expression is one of distress or discomfort. The number "67" is visible in the top left corner of the image.

The bottom panel shows a smaller, more detailed illustration of a white robot with a black head and a red chest. The robot is standing upright and appears to be pointing to the number "42" in the bottom right corner of the image. The number "42" is stylized with a blue and white color scheme.

The text in the image is in a bold, sans-serif font and reads "alphas and elder zoom zooms" and "gen x and elder millennials". The text is positioned above and below the robot, respectively. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the juxtaposition of the robot and the text.

>6-7, I just bipped right on the highway (Bip, bip)

>6-7 refers to the police code 10-67, which signifies that a death has occurred. It also alludes to 67th Street in Philadelphia, which Skrilla represents, and 6-7 may also be a shorthand for death via a reference to burial plots – six feet under and seven feet apart.

>The word “bip” has multiple meanings, so unless Skrilla provides information it’s not possible to say with authority what is meant here. Here are a few potential interpretations:

>Especially on the West Coast, “Bipping” is slang for breaking a car window. Usually this is a petty crime with the intent to grab the valuables inside, but since it’s 6-7, which means a death has occurred, this means Skrilla just shot someone through their window while they were driving.

Ok but everything he said was right. 6-7 is police code for crimes in many districts, and not all districts have the same codes, so a 10-67 is probably a code for murder somewhere.

The bipped is also weird, cuz bipping slang was just spread around for breaking into cars, but the use of it either means he drove away quickly or killed someone. Since I am an upper class white man and I drive quickly on the highway, and skrilli is a black nigger, it is likely he is referring to murder and not driving fast on the highway.

Well, 'Satanic' does equal 67 in Gematria.

And this story from before 67 took off(think this is from late 2024), has 67 as a relevant number:

"On April 12, 1983, James Ridley awoke from a 67-day coma at St. Mary's Hospital in Detroit, screaming about "the mouth in the void." What followed would disturb neurologists for decades.

Ridley, a 34-year-old auto plant worker, had suffered severe head trauma in a factory accident. Upon regaining consciousness, he began describing what he called "the true reality," one he claimed to have witnessed while comatose.

"We're cattle," Ridley told Dr. Sarah Klein during his initial evaluation. "This... everything... it's just a feeding pen. There's something out there, bigger than galaxies, keeping us distracted while it feeds." He described a vast, ancient entity that maintains our perceived reality as a form of "cosmic anesthesia." (Not the full tale, just the need parts)

>A similar phrase, "to set the world on six and seven", is used by Geoffrey Chaucer in his Troilus and Criseyde. It dates from the mid-1380s and seems from its context to mean "to hazard the world" or "to risk one's life".

>[2] William Shakespeare uses a similar phrase in Richard II (around 1595), "But time will not permit: all is uneven, And every thing is left at six and seven".

The image is a screenshot of a digital interface, likely a game or a digital tool, displaying a table with various entries and their corresponding values. The table is organized into two columns: "Entry" and "Ordinal," with "Reduction" and "Reverse" columns next to each entry. The "Reduction" column lists the number of entries that have been reduced, and the "Reverse" column lists the number of entries that have been reversed. The entries are listed in alphabetical order, and the values are displayed in a numerical format. The background of the table is black with a pattern of small white dots. The text is in white, and the numbers are in a darker shade of white. The overall style of the image is digital and appears to be a screenshot from a game or a digital tool.

Quoted By: >>41532602

1- Everything that Christians call the “Old Testament” is simply ancient Israel’s national literature. It is a mixture of: - Very ancient oral traditions and myths (creation, flood, patriarchs) borrowed and adapted from older Mesopotamian stories) - Tribal origin legends -

Royal propaganda (especially the David/Solomon golden-age narrative) - Legal codes -

Poetry - Prophetic rants - A lot of post-exilic rewriting after the Babylonians destroyed

Jerusalem in 586 BCE

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:27:51 No.41531426 Report

Quoted By: >>41532048

2- There is no predictive messianic roadmap pointing to Jesus. The “prophecies” Christians later quoted (virgin birth in Isaiah 7:14, suffering servant in Isaiah 53, born in Bethlehem in Micah 5:2, etc.) are all taken out of their original context. In their actual Hebrew and historical setting they refer to events in the prophet's own time or to Israel collectively, not to a future divine savior who will die for the sins of the world 700 years later.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:28:52 No.41531430 Report

3. From this perspective the Old Testament is just the backstory and sacred scripture of the Jewish people. Jesus and his earliest followers were operating entirely inside late

Second-Temple Judaism and did not see themselves as starting a new religion; they saw themselves as the true, purified version of Judaism that would triumph when God finally sent the Messiah and ended Roman occupation.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:29:56 No.41531434 Report

4. Jesus the Historical Cult Leader (roughly 4 BCE – 30 CE) Jesus was one of many itinerant

Jewish preachers and would-be messiahs active in the extremely volatile Galilee/Judea of the early 1st century. Others included Theudas, the Egyptian prophet, Judas the Galilean, John the Baptist (Jesus' own teacher), and later Simon bar Kokhba. All of them shared the same basic message:

The God of Israel is about to intervene dramatically, overthrow Rome and its collaborators, and establish his kingdom on earth and it's going to happen very, very soon, within the lifetime of people standing here right now.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:31:01 No.41531438 Report

Quoted By: >>41531833

5. Jesus' particular version had some distinctive, radical edges that made him stand out and attract a devoted inner circle: - Absolute demand for personal loyalty to him ("Whoever loves father or mother more than me is not worthy of me" – Matt 10:37; selling all possessions and giving the money to the poor; leaving family and fishing nets immediately) - A conviction that he personally would be vindicated as God's unique agent ("Son of Man") after suffering -

Charismatic authority demonstrated through healings and exorcisms (common among ancient holy men; modern parallels would be faith healers who are persuasive enough to trigger psychosomatic cures) He gathered a commune-like group that shared property, traveled together, and expected the world to end imminently. This is textbook small apocalyptic sect / cult behavior.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:32:02 No.41531441 Report

6. The Crucifixion (30 or 33 CE) Jesus rides into Jerusalem at Passover (the most politically charged holiday), stages a provocative prophetic act in the Temple (overturning tables), and gets arrested within days. The Romans crucify him as a messianic pretender (“King of the Jews” was the charge written above the cross, a warning to other would-be rebels). His followers scatter in terror and disillusionment.

he Birth of the Myth Within days or weeks some followers begin having visions or powerful bereavement experiences of Jesus alive again. In the highly charged apocalyptic atmosphere this is interpreted not as a ghostly apparition but as the first stage of the general resurrection that was supposed to happen at the end of the age. “God has raised him — that means the kingdom really is starting now!”

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:33:04 No.41531444 Report

7. Paul (formerly Saul), a Pharisee who never met the earthly Jesus, has his own vision on the Damascus road a few years later and becomes the most energetic missionary. Paul is the real founder of what will become Christianity as a religion distinct from Judaism: he drops almost all Jewish law requirements for gentile converts and preaches that Jesus’ death was a cosmic sacrifice that cancels sin for anyone who has faith in him. This is a theological innovation is not something the historical Jesus ever taught.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:34:05 No.41531447 Report

8. The Gospels (written 70–100 CE) The four gospels are not neutral biographies; they are theological propaganda documents written 40–70 years after the events by second- or third-generation believers who already regard Jesus as divine. Each one edits, rearranges, and embellishes the story to make its own point: - Mark (c. 70 CE): raw, grim, secretive

Jesus who keeps telling people not to tell anyone who he is; ends with an empty tomb and terrified women - Matthew & Luke (c. 85–90 CE): rewrite Mark, add birth stories and lots of proof-text “prophecies,” make Jesus more authoritative and Jewish - John (c. 90–100 CE):

Jesus is a walking divine being who gives long philosophical speeches that no Galilean peasant ever gave (“Before Abraham was, I am”) Miracles get bigger the later the gospel: in

Mark Jesus can’t do many miracles in his hometown; in John he’s raising people who have been dead four days and claiming to be God in human form.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:35:06 No.41531449 Report

9. The Rest of the New Testament The remaining letters and Revelation are in-house documents of an increasingly gentile, apocalyptic sect that keeps expecting Jesus to return any day. When he doesn’t show up, they start developing explanations (“with the Lord one day is like a thousand years”) and shifting focus to church order, moral behavior, enduring persecution, etc.

How the Cult Became a World Religion - 70 CE: Romans destroy Jerusalem and the Temple

Judaism has to reinvent itself as rabbinic Judaism; Jewish Christians are marginalized -

Paul’s gentile churches spread rapidly in the urban Greek-speaking world - 2nd–3rd centuries: increasingly sophisticated theology (Logos Christology, Trinity debates) - 312–380

CE: Emperor Constantine converts, Theodosius makes Christianity the official religion of the empire - Once it has imperial backing, competing versions (Gnostics, Arians, Marcionites, Jewish Christians) are suppressed, their books burned, and the “orthodox” version we now call the New Testament is locked in.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 04:36:08 No.41531451 Report

10. Summary from this perspective The Bible is an anthology compiled by the winners of an ancient religious struggle. The Old Testament is Israel’s national scripture with no intention of pointing to Jesus. The New Testament is the foundation myth of a Jewish apocalyptic sect that (contrary to its own urgent expectations) did not see the world end, but instead slowly transformed into a Hellenistic mystery religion promising personal salvation and eternal life

through faith in a divine dying-and-rising savior figure. Jesus himself was a failed messianic claimant whose movement should have disappeared after his execution — like all the others

— but through a combination of visionary experiences, brilliant missionary adaptation (Paul), and eventual political luck (Constantine), it instead conquered the Roman Empire and then the world. That is the story if you strip away every supernatural claim and read the texts as human documents produced by a particularly successful doomsday cult that had to keep rewriting its script when doomsday stubbornly refused to arrive.

YHWH is a fallen creator being whose own energetic DNA is damaged. Because of this, he can't perceive higher truth and is trapped inside a limited astral layer with his clone-angels. he created life from this broken state, and the defects of his mind are stamped into all beings derived from his DNA. Humans inherited a diluted version of the same flaw. His first "creations" were microbial life forms, born from his desperation. These microbes form the building blocks of all bodies, including the bodies of his angel clones. Because the angels have extremely high DNA activation, they are basically robots who can't control their own microbes. This makes YHWH dependent on beings with low DNA activation like humans, because only we can evolve and fix the problem he caused. Humans are the keys that operate his quantum computer. He lost control over many of the "keys" long ago.

He is also spiritually blind. He cannot awaken his own inner sacred nature because of the damage in his being. Humans must evolve spiritually not only for themselves but also for him. The irony is that the creator is stuck and needs the "primitive" human race for his redemption. He is confused and shaken by the rise of human philosophical reasoning. He never expected humans to develop this kind of mind. he also fears the influence of the rebellious angels and the plan associated with the christic being he calls sophia or jesus, which he perceives as a threat to his control. his religious systems on Earth were desperate attempts to steer humanity, but he failed.

He was once considered absolute by his clones. But they too are broken, competing for power because of distortions in their inherited DNA. Many rebelled and were imprisoned in astral zones. YHWH has no real sovereignty over the deeper spiritual dimensions. He is stuck in his own limited reality, unable to access what humans call the true spiritual world. YHWH has been sick for billions of years. The universal spread of cancer is interpreted as direct evidence that the creator's own essence was compromised before life was even seeded on this planet.

Grays are evil sonsofbitches who work for Satan. A sort of hivemind where they must follow evil orders or the nanotechnology within them will torture or kill them. Grays and reptilians are part of an evil alien faction called the Orion Group, they've controlled Earth politics and have ran this place as a farm for all of human history.

I think it is clear that Lujan - the military girl - is being used for nefarious purposes; to lead men to lust, and condition them for the military.

I ask, for several reasons, for everyone especially my Christian brothers and sisters on /x/ to please pray for Lujan, that she be free from any and all demonic oppression, that any demonic contracts over her be broken, all unclean spirits bound and cast out, that any spells, hexes or curses, generational or otherwise be cancelled, that she be protected, safeguarded and led by the Holy Spirit and that she be made free to know the truth, and to declare it: Jesus is Lord. In Jesus name I pray the blood of the lamb over Lujan.

I got nabbed by the NSA and Lilith and belzebub started invading my space. They're actually daimon. I still don't know if the government put them in there (computer interface?) or if I just found the daimon when my ego dissolved. They were very bad. I got Lilith to blaspheme the Holy Spirit and she went away. If people weren't on here saying they still communicate with her I'd say she died. That's actually how you kill angels and daimon. It's called a Discourse by the Holy Spirit. At this point in time all the NSA women (NSA lesbos) were worshiping Obama and trying to emasculate white subjects/patients. I thought they used Lilith for that purpose. Haven't heard from her in 9 years since she blasphemed the Holy Ghost. One of my best experiences

Just so you can see I'm not totally bullshitting, Belzebub's thing is to blaspheme all existence so in order to defeat him you have to support a linguistic standard against utter nihilism. That's literally his function, to blaspheme all existence. It's actually really funny. And the meaning of his name. As in if someone says

>This sucks

I can say

>That's just Belzebub!

Then Belzebub will say

>So I'm just?

And this is how the Discourse around language works

The face taking angels don't actually cut off your face and wear it like some ghou. When they "take" a face from someone, they are simply using that person's likeness as a mask. The purpose is to confront them with someone wearing "their own" face, as an educational tool to help them understand that the shapes and forms that made their face not only have always existed, but are not exclusively theirs. They're trying to help you divorce your ego from your material, human body. Angels are all shapeshifters, yes they have forms as described in the bible, but these are forms they take to make a point to humanity for God. This is another example of shapeshifting to make a point and help deliver God's messages.

God means intentionality. Thus, the alternative to God is non-intentionality. Non-intentionality, by definition, means there is no objective standard because there was no one to create it. No objective standard, no objective right or wrong. This makes morals subjective. If morals are subjective, they are, by definition, not binding. If they are not binding, then you must accept that everything is permitted. You cannot say that someone else's values are right or wrong, or their actions are good or evil, for who made you the judge of the world?

If we are talking purely from observation of existence and reality itself, using logic, without a creator or an objective standard, there is no binding force to anything you believe. Saying that someone should follow your non-binding subjective human rules makes you hypocritical and inconsistent. You are arguing purely from emotion, not from logic. If there is no one to judge, there is no judgment. Without judgment, there is no consequence. And without consequence, what is it exactly that is holding you back?

>>41534312

Without an objective standard, no one can claim "greed is evil," yet many of you see greed as evil. What are you basing that on? If there is no objective standard and you won't be punished for greed, yet it's beneficial for you, the only logical conclusion would be to be greedy. Would you not rather be the exploiter than the exploited? Are you not letting your emotions override your logic? And if you are letting your emotions override your logic, does that not make you irrational?

A truly rational mind would conclude: "I cannot KNOW whether there is a creator or not, but from my purely honest observation, it is clear to me that I cannot rule out the possibility of a creator because of cause and effect, symmetry and order, and the complexity of existence itself. If there is a creator, what He says is absolute and He is the only way to find everlasting value, meaning, and purpose. If there is no creator, I am not missing out on anything, because there is nothing to miss out on in the first place."

You can live as if He exists without being certain because the alternative is meaninglessness. I have told you, there is certainty in uncertainty, because what is certain is that the alternative is meaningless. Therefore, you should put your hope in Him. This is rational. Saying "there is no god" is not rational.

Faith doesn't have to be blind; once you realize the alternative is meaninglessness, faith becomes the logical, rational choice.

Lucifer was never mentioned in the Bible. Satan was mentioned. And in all Greek they used to link Jesus with Lucifer. This youtuber called MorgueOfficial is sharing some crazy shit i NEVER heard before like that Jesus had 4 brothers and that there were banned verses where Jesus basically admits that he was the serpent that tried to free Adam and Eve and that El is the true god of Yaweh and that Yaweh is the brother of Baal. Also, when you die you need a secret code to answer 4 questions to get through, if you fuck up you get reincarnated. Apparently Vatican banned all that shit.

And get this, so the God of the old testament disappeared because he was humbled by Jesus, turns out he's actually the son of the mother of darkness and the creator of the darkness and when Jesus faced the devil he actually faced the god of the old testament.

The text on the image is in a bold, red font and reads "I Found God's Alien Origins in Banned Egyptian Gospel." The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the juxtaposition of ancient Egyptian deities with the concept of alien origins.

First off, forget any Apocryphal shit, it's all fan fic.

Second, Lucifer doesn't exist, it's just a cheeky way of calling someone arrogant, comparing themselves to Venus.

The reason the Bible says "Lucifer" is because in Revelation Jesus said he was the morning star and he would give himself to he who overcomes the world as he did.

It's a very esoteric redpill meant only for the kind of person who overcomes the world but no Jesus is in no way Lucifer or Satan or whatever.

He's Jesus.

What the cognitively diminutive tend to assume. In reality, it was an elegant allusion to an older myth concerning Helel, son of Shachar, who audaciously attempted to seize Zaphon, the mountain of the gods. Isaiah is deliberately likening the Babylonian king to Helel, highlighting the same delusions of grandeur. I assure you, this parallel elicits quite a resonant chuckle in cultivated circles. "MH17" is what now?

MH730 teleported. Without question that was real.

The abilities for a special effects team to make TWO whole angles of a fully animated cloudscape plus the jet and orb trails, would have to be started months before the passengers of the plan even went out there. Only to drop the footage and DENY it this hard. There are no debunks of this incident, there are only proofs that the US has this technology now. You can literally learn it by looking online.

the real conspiracy is that the front cargo hold had a pallet of Lithium ion batteries. In the US, that is forbidden cargo on a passenger flight, but not in Malaysia.

https://www.faa.gov/sites/faa.gov/files/hazmat/resources/lithium_batteries/SAFO16001.pdf

The Malaysian government covered that up so that they wouldn't take the heat. The captain turned around for home thinking he could navigate by looking at the islands. Didn't make it.

The most striking feature is the red paint splatters on the person's face, covering the area around the eyes and mouth. The paint appears to be a mix of red and white, with some areas of the paint being thicker and more prominent than others. The person is wearing a white shirt, and the paint splatters are concentrated on the upper part of the face, particularly around the eyes and mouth. The overall effect gives the impression of a dramatic or intense scene, possibly from a theatrical or horror context. There are no visible texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the dramatic effect of the paint splatters.

This morning, I woke up feeling like I haven't since I was around 18, when I stopped having my daily nightmares. Its a sense of grogginess, but its different.

I want to preface this next part with a statement about a visualization I had while reading greentext horror here. The story was about a prisoner who would randomly hear humming, red light painting everything, followed by abduction for torture. I, for whatever reason, decide to poke around through visualization. Low and behold, there is a region of entities in the low astral that match this description. I go therr, attempt to make contact with their leader, only to be met with intentional and knowledgeable resistance. I defeated the entity and left, with some unforeseen hurdles hardening escape. I stopped reading the creepies and went to bed shortly after.

I don't know what I did in my dreams last night, but during that brief time before you fully wake up, I did have the sensation that my left hand, side of my face, legs and feet all had a form of viscera on them. For a time after waking, I had this almost youthful vigor I have been missing for almost a decade. Around 2pm it went away, and ever since I noticed the initial symptoms, I never questioned it being the "blood" of the slain. I often practice combative visualization, but I don't get sensations.

/x/ I come asking what you believe this could be or mean.

>I am rare, as I have only suffered sleep paralysis once. I did not have any feeling of being attacked, held down, or otherwise. It only took me a few minutes to regain physical activity, this was not that. The useful Vigor sensation lasted for hours, not minutes.

Thanks for clarifying—that rules out ordinary sleep paralysis as the explanation for what you experienced. What you're describing (unilateral "viscera" sensation, a real and sustained surge of energy/vigor that lasted hours, and no classic "demon on the chest" feeling) is actually closer to what some people report after certain types of spontaneous energetic breakthroughs or "kundalini-like" events, or after successfully exiting a lucid dream/astral projection with some degree of conscious control.

A few possibilities that fit better than sleep paralysis:

Spontaneous partial OBE / etheric projection

Some people exit very close to the body (the “real-time zone” or etheric plane) without the full fireworks of a classic astral projection. The sensation of “blood and gore” on one side is a known distortion that happens when the energy body is misaligned or rapidly re-integrating with the physical. The sudden vigor is often described as the etheric double slamming back in and “overcharging” the nervous system for hours afterward.

Micro-kundalini or nadic activation on the left side

The left side of the body is classically linked to the ida nadi (cool, lunar channel). A sudden clearing or overload there can feel wet, bloody, sticky, or cold, and when it balances out you get that “20 years younger” flood of energy that lingers for hours or even days.

Unintended “combat” or energy-body scuffle.

Since you only had sleep paralysis once, I would argue it's one or three.

I come here to only to figure out what exactly happened, but how to replicate it. I need this energy back. It's like a fuel for engines I didn't believe I had anymore. I need to replicate this experience, there is something to be learned here.

I'm less inclined to believe its Kundalini, however. I have previously activated Dragon Kundalini on several occasions, and those sensations are more akin to lava being tubed down through your chakra network. This really felt more like I had remnants of viscera, but since this is the only time I've had an experience like this its hard to say.

Yeah, institutionalized religion is all bullshit IMO. The only real sense you can get about higher or lower planes of existence must come from personal experience. However many well meaning people are out there trying to share what they've learned from their experience, there are twice as many charlatans trying to gain some power or influence over you for whatever reason. For these reasons I'm extremely suspect of whatever the AI says. It was trained on the same bullshit we've learned to be suspect of, but with no actual understanding for it to make its own judgments about it.

Anyway, your experience does sound like you gained some kind of energy from what happened, but you never really mentioned how you engaged with the happening emotionally. You say what you did and what happened as a result, but not how you actually felt about it. Usually energies transfer between entities that have some kind of synchronization between them that allow for that energy transfer. For example, maybe when you observed the torture on a deeper level you projected yourself on to the subject subconsciously, and then observed as though in a kind of projected state. This would make your being more ready to absorb their energy. But that begs the question... Where did that energy come from? Was this really happening somewhere?

I don't know, but if you're not larping it does sound weird.

On a much less faggy spiritual level, and a little more grounded, I woke up this morning feeling insanely energetic, despite being sleep deprived for the last 5 weeks with a newborn. No clue what that's about. I don't remember any dreams. Maybe could be some wider phenomenon happening?

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation appears to be discussing the concept of spiritual vibration, which is described as a "bunch of pseudoscientific bullshit." The text is presented in a conversational tone, with the conversation taking place in a chat app interface.

The conversation starts with a statement that reads, "What is all this about spiritual vibration? It seems like a bunch of pseudoscientific bullshit." This statement sets the tone for the conversation, indicating that the person is questioning the validity of the concept of spiritual vibration.

The conversation then moves on to discuss the concept of "spiritual vibration" in a more detailed manner. It mentions that today's "pseudoscience dressed up in quantum-sounding jargon" is being discussed. The text then references a "woo-woo version" of the concept, which is a reference to a popular belief system that is often associated with alternative or spiritual beliefs.

The conversation continues with a discussion about the "breakdown" of the "woo-woo version" of the concept, which is a reference to the breakdown of a popular belief system. The text then refers to the "actual science" that can be used to see where the "bullshit" starts and where something "real-ish" lives.

The final part of the conversation discusses the "New-Age/Spiritual Version" of the concept, which is described as "the one you're calling bullshit on." This suggests that the person is referring to a specific version of the concept that they find problematic or unscientific.

The image does not contain any visual elements beyond the text, and the style of the image is a screenshot, which is a digital representation of a text message conversation. The text is presented in a plain, unadorned font, and the background is black, which makes the white text stand out clearly. The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation, not a photograph or any other form of visual art.

Interesting, I usually try to limit the liminal feelings and subjective parts of the experience limited. Thank you for telling me this, it may help with engagement in the future.

I don't really have any emotional attachment to this experience outside of a desire to understand what happened and to rebuild it. Through some tentative testing, I have concluded the theory about "Predatory Vitality Transference" appears to be the most correct. This is based off the idea that my spirit is attempting to overcome the Watcher Rebellion, a theory I've had for over a decade now.

I don't believe I was observing and leeching. That is so far outside my modus operandi. I attack, or get attacked, and do not play with charlatan tricks like proxy channeling. I don't know where this energy came from, and yes I am almost certain that I engaged in some form of combat in an OBE and its "blood" was stained on me.

Again, this isn't a LARP, or an ARG. I am genuinely stumped at what happened, and almost nothing in the typical spheres of knowledge readily explain this. Everything I've said really is 90% critical speculation.

The text is organized into paragraphs, with the first paragraph being the largest and the last paragraph being the smallest. The text is written in a casual, conversational style, suggesting that the content is meant to be informative and engaging.

The text discusses the concept of "increasing your 'spiritual vibration' or raising your energy frequency" as a common concept in spiritual and wellness communities. It mentions that this idea is that higher-vibration states feel lighter, more joyful, peaceful, and connected, while lower states feel heavy, anxious, fearful, etc. The text also suggests that many people report feeling noticeably better with more energy, better mood, clearer thinking, and when they consistently apply these practices.

The text concludes with a list of "1. Gratitude practice (fastest and strongest)" as a recommended way to raise one's vibration. The list includes keeping a daily gratitude journal, writing 5-10 things you're genuinely thankful for, and saying "thank you" out loud for small things throughout the day.

The man appears to be examining the baby's mouth, and the baby is looking up at him with wide eyes.

The background of the image is blurred, but it suggests an indoor setting, possibly a room with a window. The text in the image is in English and reads: "HerspEs cases among babies linked to ultra-Orthodox Jewish circumcision ritual." Op Here

I want to elaborate on how I felt waking up when I was younger, versus how it is now.

You see, my entire childhood I would hate sleeping. No matter how much slept, prepared, hydrated - what have you - I would wake up feeling like absolute shit. It's like being hungover, but I feel like it came from a deeper source than just the physical. It would last for about 15-30 minutes, then I would start to feel "normal".

>inb4 thats how everyone feels

No, no its not. The last decade has proven to me that people don't just wake up with this feeling. I wake up tired, sure, but I never have this "hungover" feeling.

That unique "hungover" feeling is not something I experience from drugs. 8 year olds are not using hard drugs, or any drugs, and I was not on a prescription. The worst I have ever done is Marijuana, and even nowadays I only use Hemp. This missing "hangover" that leads into consistent overwhelming energy is the key part that's making me focus so hard on this.

Then, about an hour or two after going to "normal" I would enter this zen state where I had all of the energy I needed throughout the day, and then some. It would last until I crashed out into bed, sleeping within like 5 or so minutes.

Now, I have almost 0 energy all day every day and I usually require some form of audio/visual sensation to go to sleep. I don't wake up "hungover", and haven't since my nightmares stopped.

[136 / 9]The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post with a dark background and a white text overlay. The post is titled "Lots of people aren't thinking of the strategic benefit of the Golden Dome. America basically being immune to ICMs has a LOT of ramifications for foreign policy."

The tweet includes a series of tweets from the user "Delta9250" and "@Delta9250". The user "@Delta9250" is identified as the author of the tweet. The user "Delta9250" is followed by "@Delta9250" and "@Delta9250" again, indicating a chain of tweets.

The tweet is divided into two main sections. The upper section is a large image of a celestial body, possibly a planet or a celestial body in space, with a grid-like pattern on its surface. The lower section is a collage of three images. The first image is a close-up of a spacecraft with a red and white flag on its side, suggesting a military or space mission. The second image is a close-up of a spacecraft with a large antenna, indicating a communication or communication-related spacecraft. The third image is a close-up of a spacecraft with a large antenna, similar to the second image, but with a different color scheme, possibly indicating a different spacecraft or mission.

a lot of the horrific images from Nagasaki and Hiroshima are things you could have done with basic firebombs and every country involved in ww2 was firebombing cities.

They would have women come in with watches they thought belonged to their husbands because all they found were ashes and a single hand, other times the heat from the firebombs would melt people into the road.

And yes, the US was firebombing Japanese civilians because allegedly "The japanese military were producing military equipment inside japanese homes to be stealthy" they were not reckless, because the japs were completely used to conventional raids using hundreds. Thats why, when they noticed the 5 aircraft sent to drop the bomb (the rest were spotters, photographers etc), they cancelled their own air raid warning systems and didn't even fire upon the aircraft.

if the US had continued to use nukes they could have easily flown single aircraft at high altitude to avoid detection entirely.

Many of the nuclear explosion videos we have all seen and presumed real are shown to be complete fakes using model trees, houses and cars exploding on a set. The destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki appear not to be the result of one large explosion, but rather the result of a fire-bombing campaign comparable in pictures to Tokyo's fire-bombed remains. Hiroshima and Nagasaki also never experienced anything like the hundreds or thousands of years of radiation predicted by nuclear scientists, in fact, vegetation began growing within a month after the bombing, and the Japanese people began rebuilding almost immediately! Some nuclear physicists even claim nuclear weaponry fraudulent based solely on the technical impossibilities of fission material not to be incinerated before triggering the necessary nuclear chain reaction. Check out the documentary, read through the excellent Nuke Lies Forum, and leave a comment what you think about this nuclear hoax. Was the government teaching school-children to hide under their desks just to induce fear and funnel black tax money into a fake Cold War arms race?

In the center of the image, there is a large, stylized image of a mushroom cloud with a bright orange glow, suggesting the explosion of a nuclear weapon. The mushroom cloud is set against a dark blue sky with wispy clouds.

Below the mushroom cloud, there is a paragraph of text in a smaller font size that provides information about the Manhattan Project and the development of nuclear weapons. The text states that a bombs were invented by science-fiction writer H.G. Wells, and that the top-secret Manhattan Project was a work of fantasy and scare-mongering propaganda. It mentions that the nuclear war hoax was used to siphon money and end World-War II. The text also states that the US dropped napalm carpet fire—a fire-bombing technique—on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and that the nukes don't exist—they are a technological impossibility. It concludes by stating that the existence of these weapons is a fiction, implying that the image is a fictional representation of the concept of nuclear weapons.

The overall style of the image is informational and educational, designed to convey the myth of nuclear weapons in a visually engaging manner.

Nukes are FAKE

Watch the documentary:

https://odysee.com/@Got42d:3/The-Nuclear-Scare-Scam---Galen-Winsor-eats-uranium-to-prove-its-_harmless_:5

> physic professor who toured arround the USA in the 70s made presentations proving Uranium and radiation is literally overblow, to get it out of regular peoples hands since ist pretty easy to use for almost free energy.

He also explains the properties of certain radiation.

For example alpha radiation is just producing helium.

It can't even penetrate paper.

Radiators from radium which emit heat without energy input can be radiactively isolate by putting it in a thin aluminum Box.

But they wanted to get it out of consumers hands since they can't require money from you for that.

So then every radioactive material became dangerous.

Which people did not buy since they knew in the 50s that only polonium and Kobalt isotopes produce radiation which can affect the human being.

Then they created the Nuke scam. Cheap energy will be impossible because of that.

>US was firebombing Japanese civilians

War didnt use to be an enterprise the entire society engaged in. The entire economy was changed into to socialized war economies. More civilians died than soldiers in ww1 with some exceptions and ww2 across the board except for US. This became a general trend. War became ideological, all previous wars were about territory with some ideology as window dressing. Prior to industrial revolution civilians were just spectators of war that COULD be robbed and killed. Killing them was NOT the means to an end. Civilians became the factories in modern war and thus became targets. Civilians even without a factory are the assets of the nation. They contain the knowledge and man power to build implements of war. The cat was out of the bag when large scale centralized industry became common place.

A combination of distance, massive shielding, clever optics, and very fast mechanical shutters. Here are the main techniques used (primarily by the U.S. at Nevada and the Pacific test sites, but similar methods were used by the USSR, UK, and France):

1. Distance + Bunkers

Cameras were rarely out in the open close to ground zero.

Most “close-up” cameras were placed in heavily fortified concrete or earth-covered bunkers with thick (2–10 ft) concrete walls, lead shielding, and steel doors.

Example: At the Nevada Test Site, the standard “camera bunker” was a mound of earth with a small port facing the tower or device. Typical distances for surviving cameras were 500–5,000 feet for multi-kiloton shots, farther for megaton tests.

2. Mirror Periscopes and Long Focal-Length Lenses

Direct line-of-sight through a window would blind or destroy the camera from the thermal pulse and gamma flash.

Instead, they used front-surface mirrors mounted outside the bunker on towers or in armored housings. The mirror reflected the image down a pipe or directly into a lens inside the bunker.

Rapatronic cameras (ultra-high-speed shutter cameras developed by EG&G) used this setup: the mirror was 10–30 feet in front of the actual film camera, far enough that the thermal/gamma pulse arrived after the shutter had already closed.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 10:05:04 No.41532488 Report

Quoted By: >>41532491

>>41532483

3. Extremely Fast Shutters

The initial fireball emits an enormous pulse of gamma rays, X-rays, and UV that arrives almost instantly and would fog or destroy film.

Two key shutter types solved this: Rapatronic (magnetic) cameras: Developed by Harold Edgerton and others. Exposure times as short as 10 nanoseconds to 1 microsecond. The shutter was essentially a Kerr cell or exploding-wire system that opened and closed in millionths of a second, capturing the fireball before the shock wave arrived.

Mechanical drum or rotating-mirror cameras (e.g., Fastax, Mitchell): Spinning mirrors or prisms that swept the image across film at up to 10,000–20,000 frames per second. The film was moving so fast that each frame was exposed for only microseconds.

4. Lead and Thermal Protection

Film magazines were wrapped in lead foil or placed inside lead-lined boxes to block gamma and neutron radiation.

Lenses sometimes had thick lead-glass windows or aluminum mirrors to reflect thermal infrared away.

For very large yields (megaton range), cameras were placed miles away and used extremely long telephoto lenses (up to 200-inch focal length) or even coelostat mirrors (like solar observatory mirrors) to track the fireball.

5. One-Way Sacrificial Mirrors and Ports

Many bunkers had a small port covered by a fast-acting steel or aluminum plate that opened milliseconds before the shot and closed again before the shock wave arrived.

Some used a sacrificial mirror that was blown away or melted after the first few frames. This protected the real camera behind it.

The man is dressed in a formal suit with a striped tie, and he is gesturing with his right hand, as if he is speaking or explaining something. His expression is serious, and he is looking directly at the camera. The background is plain and white, which contrasts with the man's dark attire and hair, making him the focal point of the image. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is straightforward and appears to be a portrait, likely intended for a professional or promotional context.

Famous Examples

Operation Tumbler-Snapper “Easy” shot (1952): One of the most famous rapatronic sequences showing the fireball ropes and spikes.

Operation Ivy “Mike” (1952, first H-bomb, 10.4 Mt): Cameras at 10-20 miles used 60- to 100-inch telescopes; closer stations were in bunkers 8-10 miles away.

Operation Teapot “Turk” (1955): A 43-kt shot where a camera bunker only 1,050 ft from ground zero survived because it was buried under 9 ft of earth and had a mirror port.

In short: no single camera survived by being tough enough to sit in the open. They survived through distance, massive concrete/earth shielding, optical tricks (mirrors and periscopes), and shutters so fast they were done photographing before the destructive parts of the blast arrived.

Alright schizos enlighten me and others on this Digital ID crap thats being pushed in the UK. From what I heard, you won't be able to work without it in the future, perhaps not even buy.

Im in Eastern Europe and if anyone is willing to share, would like to know more about this.

They want to implement a Digital Identity wallet in EU similarly to the Britain.

Seems a very surreal thing under the guise of "safety" and "convenience" for sure. Damn technocrats.

Also it seems it is being very quietly advanced, I have had no news about this in my country and really it seems like a silent thing.

Please i beg any of you who know greatly about this and CBDC's, share your thoughts.

Steal someones phone and it is identity gone. Everything is tied to a sim card and email password, Convenient but as tech literacy declines a massive attack vector. Dumb a population down enough and you could steal a whole countries citizens lives within a day. I think possibly in person ID documents with fingerprints and some kind of password would be a lot better. Unless the tech is way ahead of what publically have now. Transferring someones who identity could take seconds.

Basically they create the problem then tell you they have the solution order out of chaos. Basically there new schtick is a I will get so advanced you won't be able to tell the difference sooooo long story short people will be able to replicate your voice and be able to steal your monies from bank account so we need a verifiable system to make sure this isn't possible. So they will upload everything no to block chain to confirm you are who u say u r because block chain can't be hacked yet. In so doing every aspect of your life from medical , banking , social security numbers will all be on your digital id. You won't be able to sell or interact w the system w out it if u do something wrong they turn off your chip or your digital id making you a ghost in the shell.

Research Aaron Russo he talks about it before he was killed.

Research Chainlink Token infrastructure and how they want to tie block chain data to outside data sources using decentralized oracles

New world order will run on Chainlink

If u don't take the vaxx ur a ghost

If you don't pay your taxes ur a ghost

I'm everything will be so connected if you speed on the road they will automatically deduct from your digital id ealllet the fee

Cameras drones everywhere

Like how China is now even w the social credit score. If you owe taxes ur social credit score goes down etc and everyone around u will know even talking to someone w a lower credit score Ethen u will probably be taboo

It's literal total control where a few elites pull the strings

Read the book the new world order it's scary but you will see everything is already in place and happening

It's like a slow bowling frog people won't notice until it's too late. So countries will go online one after the other

America probably being the last because we the last bastion of gun nuts

I've researched this for years I see it very clearly and it's absolutely terrifying.

Emp won't get every system block chain will be so decentralized you won't be able to target every node

As long as one node is still online the block chain will still survive so nodes will be in un emp able safe zones. Sorry to disappoint but every avenue has been covered. Bitcoin won't ever go offline it's too big at this point.

we already have this in australia, its fucking miserable.

its called myGov and its basically a one stop shop for all your social services, thats the way they got more people to adopt it. It was more coinvent to go though myGov than it is for traditional services; like for example having to go to a certain station to buy a physical ticket instead of just signing up to opal through myGov and getting a ticket that way which is way quicker.

the system is hilariously shit and broken, maybe that's by design to demoralize people or something. most of the code for these systems are outdated, programmed by diversity (you know who I'm talking about) or AI vibecode, lowest bidder type shit. we're about to enter an age of the worst databreaches we've ever seen.

on CBDC shit, we kinda already have that with the big payment networks, look up how much of the worlds GDP stripe processes and thats only ONE of the card companies. this shits been in the works for a while, frog and pot analogy or whatever.

on a final note, is whats interesting when it comes to the under-16s social media bans, most of the politicians who pushed for it have heavy investments or are lobbyists for said companies that develop the technology required.

What you here is that it's apart of the control grid but that only made sense when Bitcoin and eth were the ultimate winners. Which failed big time. What you will hear is that the control grid is still under way but that's some bullshit it failed a control grid works when it's centralized & you control the asset. Hence why Bitcoin and ETH won and had Jay Clayton used to give them the green light while he opened the way to sue everyone else in the space.

Why ETH? Well it's bloated, high cost, and requires a huge barrier of entry. The most favorite things for elites since it's prices normal people out. Again it failed. Kinda why Epstein is now being labeled with Bitcoin.

Either way these plans failed and are still using the narrative as a fear mongering tool because you and the whole public is still unaware of the whole story. Your allowed allowed to be told what story to believe in Good luck!

Bingo. It's a house of cards they can't admit is already fallen.

The elite's greatest strength is their damndest weakness, they are bound to ancient cycle and their prophecies are simply fanfiction to capitalize upon a situation and work it to their advantage. Ordo ab chao style, their vision remains the same but their plans and techniques stay mutable and reactive to the herd.

Something changed this past decade and shifted their fulcrum. Pedogate, discordant memetics, all of it transferred that fluid "ordo ab chao" current to the people, to anons and the whistleblowers and the true rebel thought leaders. We began exposing them and fighting back, ritualizing this usurpation of energy. Now their formula does not work, they cannot react; when they do it's not effective. They cannot shut it down; when they do twenty more open up. This has forced them into a tactical corner where they must admit it's not their fancy new tools and AI god which suddenly became ineffective, but that their founding, guiding vision itself must be flawed or outdated. That is how they have already lost: belief. If they are to win they must become Theseus' ship and lose themselves and their vision entirely in the process to gain something greater.

Food control. Even though it's "voluntary" in this clip, that's how it starts. The world saw something tangentially related to this, in Aus during the scamdemic lockdowns, when riot police blocked off crowds of people who wanted to buy food from a farmer's market. The footage showed plenty of violence and police brutality, one of many cases from that period. With digital ID technology in place, there wont be any need for riot police.

Police Brutality

<https://files.catbox.moe/qkkxbh.webm>

The Lockdowns and the whole scamdemic were about technocracy, so this is relevant.

The idea that you need to use your phone to get groceries should terrify people more than police brutality, the latter is an explicit use of force, and the former is an implicit, covert use of force, that is drastically more sinister because it's a system that can do things no police thugs can do, they just don't have the numbers to track, target and deny food to however many people they want to kill, it's a system, orders of magnitude larger in scale, comprehensive and silent, in contrast to a loud squad of goons.

See <https://x.com/redpilldispensr/status/1979141500895219744>

If this is normalized, there's nothing preventing them from implementing Social Credit Scores that ties into what food you can buy if any.

Corporations, governments, banks are a few years away from being able to banish undesirables and starve them to death, with complete stealth and impunity. NO political system has ever had that kind of power in history.

That is technocracy.

The soldiers are positioned in a line, with the man in the foreground being the most prominent. The background is a nondescript urban street scene with a building and a truck. Overlaid on the image is a text that reads "PAPERS PLEASE," which is a play on the phrase "Papers Please" from the movie "Schindler's List." All of ancient history is a hoax, and most likely everything before the 1800s/1700s.

No, this isn't a Tartaria thread. This is to discuss how EVERYTHING about history is fake.

Primary sources do not exist pre 1700. We don't have any original surviving documents from the time of ancient egypt, rome, china etc.

Take the Oxyrhynchus Papyri for example. This papyri contains almost everything we know about ancient egypt and related texts about philosophy and other topics.

Funny thing is, this "Oxyrhynchus Papyri" was only "found" in the 1890s by a couple of fine freemason gentlemen.

If these pieces of papyri were only found in the 1800s, what possible method can we use to judge their authenticity? Carbon dating is of course complete bs, and all other methods of judging authenticity contain circular reasoning. For example, "the text is from 2000 BC because the text says it's from 2000 BC".

Scholars say that they contain fragments from other works that we know are genuine, but how do we know those works are genuine themselves when their own sources don't go back before the 1700s?

The Nag Hammadi library, which lots of people like to cite here, found in the 1940s.

The Book of Enoch, another favourite for people on here to cite, found in the late 1700s by a Freemason who "unearthed" them after travelling in Ethiopia for a few years. How do the Nephilim believers here know that this freemason didn't just make this text up, or that he bought a made up copy from some Ethiopian man?

Can anyone point me to any primary source for any of ancient history please. Or at least, anything that has a verifiable chain of ownership?

To be more accurate, I do not know if ancient history is "fake", but I do know it is completely unverifiable.

Discuss

Here is the official story for the discovery of the Nag Hammadi library

"Scholars first became aware of the Nag Hammadi library in 1946. Making careful inquiries from 1947–1950, Jean Doresse discovered that a local farmer, who was a teenager at the time, dug up the texts from a graveyard in the desert, located near tombs from the Sixth Dynasty of Egypt. In the 1970s, James Robinson sought out the local farmer in question, identifying him as Muhammad 'Ali al-Samman. Al-Samman told Robinson a complex story involving a mission occasioned by a blood feud, digging to obtain fresh soil for agricultural use and thus finding the manuscripts in a buried jar, hesitating to break the jar due to superstitions about a jinn, and—at the mission's culmination—engaging in cannibalism with the target's heart. His mother claimed that she burned some of the manuscripts as tinder for the family oven; Robinson identified these with Codex XII. Robinson gave multiple accounts of this interview, with the number of people present at the discovery ranging from two to eight.[6] Jean Doresse's account contains none of these elements."

History is a spook in general. Your world was born when you were born. Consider it a virtual world with built-in lore-- some of it widely retold, some of it 'hidden'. It's all a ruse. The only history is your life experience as encoded in your memories. Memories which God can manipulate at will if need be. All the alleged 'facts' you state about the sequence of manuscript discovery is just lore about lore. Means nothing. Only the content of scripture is meaningful.

The image is a screenshot of a text in a language that appears to be Arabic. The text is in a script that is not immediately recognizable as English, and the content seems to be a narrative or a description. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the narrative and the right column containing a reference to a source.

The narrative begins with the author describing the situation and the reasons for their actions. They mention that they led Sama'a out of its midst and caused him to dwell in another sanctuary, and then removed the debris of that temple. The author then looks for the old foundation deposit, digging to a depth of eighteen cubits into the ground. They describe Sama'a as a great lord, revealing to them the original foundations of Ehabar, the temple which is his favorite dwelling.

The right column references a source, stating that the author is the son of Sarog, who had no king among his predecessors. The text mentions that three thousand and two hundred years have passed since the text was written.

The style of the image is textual, with a focus on the narrative and the reference to a source. The text is in a formal and structured format, typical of academic or historical writing. The use of Arabic script and the context of the text suggest that the image is likely from an academic or historical document.

How can carbon dating work if we don't have an item of the same material that is verifiably from the time we suppose it is?

For example, a book is discovered in 2025 that we wish to know the date of.

We use carbon dating to compare it to a book that is claimed to be from 2000 BC, but this book was only found in the 1940s and is itself un-verifiably from 2000 BC.

All carbon isotopes decay at the same rate. They are present in organic materials. So for something that is made from dead organic matter you have an accurate timing, irrespective of the need to compare it with anything else. Doesn't matter how long it's been buried in the ground,

Therefore you know how old an item is.

>the papyri is 2000 years old because the carbon dating matches the other 2000 year old papyri (which also has dubious origins)" that isn't how it works so I can't explain that. That statement is wrong. I've explained already it doesn't work by comparing two items.

Until you realize that the Roman church used monks to do just that for ages, to the point where there is now not a single document that hasn't been eradicated or edited by judeo christian larping. Look at the private archives at the Vatican. I mean how does dating even work? Just relying on a bunch of documents to vaguely link in chronological order to fit the narrative of the historian before you who's just as in the dark as you.

Take the history of early Christianity. The only stuff we have on it that's not biblical is Josephus and then Tacitus who just echoes Josephus. The only source that verifies the existence of Josephus is himself, there has never been verification of his existence nor his claims from any outside source. There are no known manuscripts of Josephus' works that can be dated before the eleventh century, and the oldest which do survive were copied by Christian monks. Basically this character was introduced at some point, then the monks faithfully copy it thinking it's real. Then by disseminating it into the mass consciousness, it becomes "his-story". Then we continue the lie because we know nothing else

The photographs are arranged in two columns, with the top half containing four photographs and the bottom half containing four photographs. Each photograph is labeled with the name of the location, which is written in a script font.

Starting from the top left, the first photograph shows a mountainous landscape with a river flowing through it. The third photograph is labeled "Oruro, Bolivia," and it shows a valley with a river running through it. the british government are jewish grifters and the british museum is the same scam.

the jews manipulated the bible. they manipulated all historic texts. they removed the word forest, and replaced it in the text with the desert.

so when you read history about "people" living in "deserts", its the jews wanting to establish themselves as the ancient people.

the short answer to your question is "jews".

Neverending threads on this board about Gnosticism, Christianity, Nephilim etc, but no one ever mentions the obvious utter bullshit stories we have surrounding the primary sources for these topics.

The oldest primary source we have for the bible, "The Codex Sinaiticus", was found in the 1840s.

Even if we take the official story at face value, they only date this codex as being from 325-360ad. So even then, this "primary source" is already a couple of hundred years after the life of Jesus.

If we take a more likely read on the matter, we have to ask ourselves, if this "Codex Sinaiticus" was only found in the 1840s, what were the previous editions of the Bible, produced before the 1840s, being based on?

It's an endless chain of bullshit based upon bullshit, and then we make a "discovery" that backs up the bullshit.

Think of it like this:

The jews/freemasons/controllers "create" the Bible in the 1600s, and claim it is based on some ancient sources that they promise are genuine and real.

These ancient sources are locked away in the vatican library or are now "lost".

They then "find" a Codex Sinaiticus that just happens to corroborate "The Bible" that they themselves completely fabricated and made up a hundred years before.

First they create the story, Ancient rome, ancient egypt, the bible, ancient china etc. They then get this "history" approved by the experts and academia and society. They then "find" documents that back up this 'history'.

Do this for a couple hundred of years, and you have our society today that can't even fathom the idea that this history is bullshit.

This makes absolutely no sense. Because history is fake, that doesn't mean our thoughts and considerations about this matter are automatically "fake and worthless".

How did you come to that conclusion?

In this thread, we are making reasonable speculations about the fact that history has very obviously been tampered with. Nothing about this speculation is "fake".

If we identify someone is lying, and we attempt to figure out the truth, that doesn't mean everything we consider about the matter is also a lie. This just makes zero sense whatever. Nice attempt at derailing the thread though. Your masters should probably lower your pay.

Sit in a position that is comfortable to you and that won't distract you.

Close your eyes.

Clear your mind and focus on your breathing.

Listen to the world within and outside of you without judgement. You are but a passerby observing the world, not an actor who must interact with it.

There's not much to it. Certainly not enough that you need a whole book for it.

Repetition of a mantra clears the psychic/auric body. You hear and think thoughts because your auric body is disturbed, like a choppy river. Mantras normalize the flow and quiet it. Just say the word over and over loudly in your mind. Ommm-ommm-ommm-omm or inhale, repeat on exhale. Since I'm a visual person I prefer to concentrate on an image. Usually an encircled flaming pentagram. Try it for even a few minutes and feel how clean you feel. Christians can keep their crosses, the pentagram is the most powerful symbol ever invented

Meditation is just training to focus your attention. You can focus on your breathing, your muscles, what you hear what you smell what you see, what you feel what you think.

Zen meditation is just a simple way to train the attention muscle to focus your attention on a single thing for longer and longer periods. You can then translate it to focusing it on other things, but some might find it easier to choose a different thing to train their attention focus on.

>Not even for a day or some hours? Why you think this is?

my experience of samahdi was formless jhanas beyond normal physical perception

when the awareness is cultivated deeply and diligently, most things pass out of perception as the great stillness arises

what makes it great (vs some normal concept of stillness) is the perceptible and palpable energy potential that lies within conditioning the body + still mind (& neurology) + fixed awareness produces this the energy builds underneath this great stillness, and eventually a brilliant spark of light leaps forth from it the first time it happens, its a guarantee you'll be shocked to the point where samahdi disappears

the first time it happened to me, there was such an extreme level of joy that spontaneously arose that I had the impulse to leap from my cushion and yell yipeeeeeeeeeee!!!!!!

the best part about it was that I had no idea it was coming, did not expect this at all, never heard mention of it before - it all came from me just trying to take what I was cultivating to its logical conclusions, as far as I could take 'em took perhaps another month, month and a half to come again - but then you discover that this arising is tricky, like being thrown a hot potato, it doesnt stay readily

but after a few weeks, it came again, I held it for a very short while, but the slightest slip of focus and it disappears

as it continued to return, I learned to catch and hold the arising light - but if you have a random thought happen, it destroys samahdi

I then spent more time refining, I learned ways to detect the precursors of mind perturbation, I learned ways to reaffirm the focus to prevent any perturbations that would destroy the light

these perturbations were perceived as slight deformations in the ball of light that arises, here is where "turning the light around" helped to affirm the proper shape at the niwan affirming the proper shape was an outcome, not an intention like with all cultivation methods, it is proper to focus on the fundamentals that cause the things to arise and not the things that arise themselves otherwise the basis for the things disappears, along with the basis, the things themselves disappear.

given that my experience of samahdi was entirely formless realm jhana (sort of the easiest most commonly used verbiage that goes along with this)

I dont have any experience of this light carrying forth beyond any case where I was not superlatively well conditioned and my awareness fixed and focused to the point that all else was nonexistent

so in reality I think I had a ways to go before it would become any sort of ongoing enlightenment experience time isnt really experienced while in such a state, one is just sitting comfortably for a moment, the duration is experienced as a moment

I would perhaps expect that eventually sleep would be supplanted entirely by this, but I was only doing 2-3 hours per evening before sleeping for 5-6 hours

indeed, one of the times the overall energy levels faltered and samahdi stopped arriving was from trying to supplant too much of normal sleep with meditation

I've re-cultivated it a dozen times over and had it return, return, return

eventually I began to understand why serious monks go innawoods to become more successful, because modern life has many aspects that are not conducive to serious spiritual cultivation

at these "early" stages I have described to you itt, the energy that builds is delicate, precariously perched, easily destroyed by missteps missteps can be my friend had a weekend party and I drank 3 days in a row, it can be my woman pissed me off that much, it can be my woman wont stay off muh dick

but I'm not innawoods, I'm here telling you guys how to get there because I have this gut feeling in me that says the trickier way to do it is to do it while living a normal life but like Mr Scott said in Star Trek 2,

>Well I guess if its important to ye, ye Make the time

Quoted By: >>41520723

>>41518301

the main idea of focusing on one thing is to learn to quiet the mind which is a prerequisite for being able to cultivate the awareness and leave everything else aside cultivating the awareness gets interrupted by mentation

so there's this insight to be had that thinking or any sort of mentation consumes the same root energy that's required to build up, create the great stillness, and serve as the basis for the spark of samahdi to arise from it its why contemplation and "real meditation"/dhyana are mutually exclusive its important for a cultivator to understand this point that they are mutually exclusive this necessarily 100% means that if you are contemplating while on meditation time, you're just spinning your wheels and not accomplishing much contemplate on other time

focus on awareness and all of the fundamentals that support it while on meditation time all of these proper methods lead to a quieter mind, best done by establishing the habit of cultivation properly and sticking with it, otherwise the ruminating mind will return to its babbling proclivities

this is why the habit energy of cultivation must be very well fortified if one is to make any appreciable gains in meditation

>Have you ever met or heard of people who achieved deep meditative states during everyday life?

no, and deep meditative states dont really appear to be readily concurrent with everyday life

but I can grok a halo coming from it at some stage

what does arise during everyday life is...

you enter deep stages of sleep almost immediately, sleep is largely dreamless, your body doesnt move

(but when you do have a dream it is an absolute epic)

while awake, the mind is clear and calm, no random thoughts spontaneously arise at all which should not be confused with an inability to initiate thinking

if anything, self initiated thinking is clearer, more efficient

there's just no random chatter

this is because of realized habituated efficiencies and by realize I mean definition 2 which denotes the actual arising thereof and not any sort of intellectual understanding indeed, what I am describing cannot be achieved by intellectual reasoning or thinking of any sort, as I mentioned above, since thinking consumes the same root energy that awareness requires to manifest these things

there are other roadsigns for this process, like when my breaths first hit 50, 55 seconds on average, I experienced a significant metabolic boost like I just finished a month's worth of a new workout routine

the body is light and comfortable, the jing firm

the smiling buddha smiles for the endocrine boost that happens, he's fat for the nerve transition from yang to yin

but as I've described doing this process many times over, subsequent immersions see these signposts happen at shorter breath durations

one of my teachers said the only thing you get to take with you when you leave here are your experiences

indeed, as the light returns, you begin to welcome it like your best old friend you've had forever and there's great contentment and subtle joy that he's arrived again to visit

I don't agree. You are bundling all thinking as contemplating. I think there is passive contemplation which is commonly known as monkey mind, but that is not a focused thing.

Active imagination on the other hand is directed thinking and can be very much a target of your attention. That is what sets us apart from animals and what allows us to learn from the past and think of the future.

Read Jung for more on this. Once you can direct your mind and imagination, you can navigate in the thought realm because attention is the engine that drives you there.

you are missing some fundamental points about the nature of awareness itself and I highly doubt there's any selection of Jung's words you can reference that will convince me that Jung ever accomplished the things I'm talking about. (if you are so inclined, go ahead and post some if you think so, I think I'll wind up having to dismantle that also though.)

active imagination is still imagination

passive contemplation as you define it isnt even contemplation contemplation implies direction to the thought process, just letting it go wherever it may is just daydreaming

"navigating thought realms" are still realms of thought this still at root precludes the awareness from being focused on awareness and is instead focused on realms of thought

I'm not saying contemplation is bad except if one is doing it thinking he's cultivating the awareness, because its just really not anyway the context of my words is samahdi, I'm telling key factors that prepare one's conditions for its arrival

you're going rather elsewhere

one should not expect to find samahdi in the places you point to

of course I did not say the avenues you point to are entirely fruitless

except unless one is looking for samahdi there

The image is a close-up photograph of a person's torso and upper chest area. The individual appears to be wearing a metallic or reflective material that gives the skin a shiny, reflective appearance. The person has a mustache and is looking directly at the camera with a neutral expression. The background is out of focus, suggesting the photo was taken in a dimly lit environment. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is candid and appears to be taken in a casual setting, possibly for a humorous or artistic purpose.

Olfactory anon says right things but my opinion is that many people just focus their raw awareness on their body and breath and when they manage to do that (by ignoring thoughts) then they will "magically" watch their breath correct itself and their bodies acquiring the correct posture.

All that by just focusing your awareness on your body (and especially on the parts which feel mostly tight/wrong - this will correct then, just don't analyze, just focus awareness).

It takes time and lots of sits however.

Also in many retreats I've been at there were always people who had a perfect breath, the perfect posture and the perfect lotus, and they never trained for any of it.

Ok you are probably right about samahdi, whatever that is. I was answering the general question, what is meditation? think people overcomplicate it. There are many schools of that that have all these terms and stuff. It's at the end just training to focus your attention to the point you are in control of it for longer and longer periods. At least that is what I have learned from doing it myself.

People talk about meditation like it's some mystical superpower that unlocks hidden dimensions, but here's the boring, practical version nobody bothers to say:

Meditation is basically a mental diagnostic test.

It's the "check engine light" reader for your brain.

You sit still not because sitting still is magical, but because it's the easiest way to see what's actually going on under the hood without distractions screaming over it.

What it actually does:

- shows you what's been bothering you
- shows you where your attention naturally drifts
- makes it obvious whether your routines match what you say you want
- highlights stress, avoidance, or unresolved crap you keep sidestepping

Sometimes you meditate and think, "I should really call my mom."

Sometimes you think, "Why am I even here? I should be working out."

Sometimes you think nothing at all, which usually means you're exhausted.

None of that is failure.

That is the data.

Meditation doesn't fix your problems.

It's the part where you finally stop long enough to see them clearly so you can go fix them yourself.

TL;DR:

Meditation = a moment of honesty without distractions.

Everything else is marketing.

samahdi is when the spiritual light arrives, its practically the holy grail of meditation outcomes

some words I've read mistake it for enlightenment itself and while it is certainly a precursor, enlightenment is also usually spoken of as a completion that doesnt fade

basically by denying inputs that act upon the olfactory nerve, we begin to truly build the reserves that lead to the arising of samahdi

I'm adamant about some things that are core contributors to the achievement and as I've redone, rebuilt them a dozen times over in different practice-chunks, I've had extra time to observe these core contributors and signposts that tell you these things are building, have arrived, are in imminent danger of collapse

sometimes I appear as a word nazi because of this, but its only because I want to make sure the reader gets these crucial keypoints so as to have the best chance of success in their own endeavor

I harp on refining the breath so much because the neurological potentials generated by sense activity directly contribute to the energy remainder that builds in the brain and unleashes a random thought when said potential gains enough juice.

there's a threshold of energy remainder that can take place, any higher and it gains the ability to leave the midbrain and jump into higher brain centers to fulfill the thought-impulse

the focus of awareness lessens this energy remainder

but if the energy remainder from inefficient sense processing just keeps adding up, it gets harder and harder for the awareness to fully rectify the discrepancy

so by highly streamlined mechanics, we necessarily lessen the rate that the energy remainder builds up and indeed we can lessen it to the point where awareness can fully resolve the rest yall might find it strange, if you ever reach the point where you can understand how much energy the senses consume

it is decidedly not insignificant

this is just another level of "preventing energy leakages" that you read about in many places

it is difficult to give a precise definition for samahdi, though

but it is a state of superlatively high efficiency

it is highly restorative, when one is at the stage of having it return every day, it is like a sparkly glowy energy bath

the body winds up craving it towards the end of the day like your cat knowing its getting a treat

I study a lot of random physics type stuff and discovered a QM experiment that had some interesting correlations, it related to combining probability amplitudes basically if the timing is off, you add the amplitudes and subtract for phase discrepancy

but an interesting thing is, once the timing is right, the equation changes slightly and allows for a higher result but another jump comes when certain information about individual events are obscured, the equation changes again and allows for an even higher result

this relates to practice in that not having the coherence, you dont get the constructive amplification aligning properly, the constructive amplification comes but when the muscle memory is so good that the entire physical process is more or less relegated to autonomous processes, that's when maximal mental capital is available to direct towards awareness itself

once these things are fulfilled then the great stillness should arrive where all physical phenomena begin to fall away and there's palpable energy in the stillness refined further is where the spark of spiritual light leaps from the great stillness, the spark of yang arising from the depths of yin

it just winds up being that mentation precludes most of this from ever happening

so I try to make these points as clearly as possible, these advanced places are right there, you just have to do things properly its why I began my whole breathwork endeavor with..."what's the right way to take a breath, what's the most efficient way" chatgpt tier slop aside, this is exactly the sort of approach I am saying puts a glass ceiling on your efforts and is largely a recipe to get nowhere, and nothing out of meditation except for maybe figuring out where some life things are going for you.

I cannot stress enough that meditation is not contemplation and if one conflates the two and sits there contemplating, one will never achieve any real fruits of meditation >when i try to meditate theres constant music playing in my head how do i resolve it/ take care of it?

understand that the early stages of breathwork are a proprioception exercise

you put the full weight of your awareness into feeling the timing of your guts

every time a song starts up, stop it and feeeeeeeel out the timing of your breath in the gut

it just winds up being that you have built up this musical habit energy

I get it, I'm a musician too

but you just need to directly force it to stop, and one of the best vehicles to do so is breath proprioception think of it in terms of habit-energies

there's no such thing as an anti-habit

there's only replacing one habit with another so the idea is to lessen the habit energy of songs and cultivate the habit energy of breathwork

once the new habit-energy has become strong, the nerves are programmed, the muscle memory solid...you'll be at a point where tunes disturb you less

According to the book I posted you do contemplation after shifting, which is basically so much control over the breath that you perceive it comes from nowhere, and leaves to no trace.

- 1) Start with counting each breath (each inhale and exhale) to 10
- 2) then follow flow
- 3) then fixed point of consciousness at nostrils, pushing breath from each organ (nostrils, throat, lungs, heart) down to stomach, and back
- 4) then shifting
- 5) contemplation
- 6) purification
- 7) mindfulness of body
- 8) mindfulness of mind

I'd imagine this would take most of you about 3 months

>According to the book I posted you do contemplation after shifting, which is basically so much control over the breath that you perceive it comes from nowhere, and leaves to no trace

contemplation should just plainly and simply not be done during meditation. afterward is fine I guess, but its just not necessary

>comes from nowhere

this is pretty much the only reason I responded to the post, because once the breath is subtle enough that the olfactory nerves are not triggered by the flow of air, the stomach does rise and fall with no sensation of air entering

I don't encourage counting, it's just mentation, labeling things, extra unnecessary mental processing

the air should flow through the nose but none of the structures that touch air should have any involvement in moving the air through the system

there's no need to focus on the nose, it only serves to help draw air to the olfactory nerves, which we're trying to have that not happen pushing breath from each organ is getting into other cultivation practices, it's not necessary for stillness meditation at all things like shifting are not well defined enough to be useful, purification is an outcome

mindfulness of body and mind are just part and parcel of every step

many sets of instructions I see posted have a lot of this superfluous crap in them that are either unnecessary or outright counterproductive

Meditation should be focused awareness without judgment, ie thinking.

There's visualization, like drawing a mandala in your mind. But I think that's pretty high level meditation they do in Kalachakra. And it's not really imagining.

If you have incoming visions you should simply watch them unfold like anything else and not direct it. Or simply ignore it and go back to what you're supposed to focus on.

God I hate the Hebrew religion so much. It has literally destroyed 90% of correct interpretations to the point they unironically believe that an omnipotent being has 0 clue where a spirit came from and uses that as a scapegoat for all of the problems of the world.

They're so ignorant to the fact that Eloah is literally both sides of the coin that allows both good and evil, love and hatred, to exist together. We have to choose Elysium over Earth, and only then can we make Heaven a reality (Heaven is what Earth will become, like Elysium, but Humanity as a whole prevents this),

You can't have free will or true conviction if there is only ever really one choice. The less evidence for your faith, the stronger the conviction is. Its easy to fall into the same pitfalls as everyone else when there is evidence, but what about when it doesn't exist?

Let me put it in a more practical, grounded to reality argument here.

Let's say you have a system of 9 people, and they're looking for 1 more. 1 Admin, 1 Mod, 3 Cops, 4 Citizens and they're looking for one more. They get two applicants, one being altruistic by nature albeit limited, and the other one is absolutely willing to do anything in order to get ahead. Which do you believe this system would pick?

I could easily go out and do dastardly deeds against my fellow man, creatures, all in an effort to short them for my benefit. That's how nature works, right? Well, that's the whole point. We're supposed to be overcoming our baser nature and become greater than our base parts. This is what Alchemy was all about. It is much harder to live righteously, and those hardships are what separate the posers from believers.

Because, at a certain point in study, you come to realize that Eloah himself allows Lucifer to perform great deeds against him all in a bid towards his greater plan. Its a hard pill to swallow, and many can't come to terms with their all-loving creator allowing tragedies to happen to them and others.

You absolutely get to choose, and you could argue that siding with Evil has plenty of benefits between now and the end. But that's all it will ever be, a temporary refuge against the burden of your own sins to follow. Like I said, I could easily be a POS and short others for my gain, but that's not the point that Christianity teaches.

You're partially correct here. Similar to how lying is knowing better but stating otherwise, that's generally how doing an evil act works. There is a presumptive law of innocence regarding individuals who are unaware of their actions, who act in good faith with honest intentions. There are many laws like this that have examples in the bible, that evil forces attempt to use to their benefit.

We are given a form of instructions and knowledge, its in all of the various religious texts of the world. Its up to you to decide what you believe in and apply. For example, what is seen as evil is often relative (spider eats the fly, the spider is evil to the fly, but the spider is only feeding themselves).

At the bottom of each panel, there is a quote in white text that reads: "There is no emotion, there is no peace. There is no ignorance, there is no knowledge. There is no passion, there is no power. Through knowledge, there is no death, there is only the force."

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, using the Star Wars characters to parody the Jedi and Sith codes, which are significant in the Star Wars universe. The text and quotes are a play on the themes of the Jedi and Sith, with the Jedi being associated with peace and knowledge, and the Sith being associated with power and death.

The Spider and fly example also harkens back to my previous argument about overcoming nature versus using nature as a justification (ex: seahorses are transexual, so humans can be too right?!?!).

The spider can't do evil because all it knows is nature. It has no capacity to make the decisions to change its food source to be less harmful to other creatures like Humanity has. So in that breath, a human eating "kosher" or "halal" foods that are forced to endure un-needed suffering are, in fact, committing an evil act (neutral or lawful evil), where the spider is simply neutral as it cannot make that decision itself. It only has one way to eat.

Its the corruption of the pure. Unfortunately, due to the nature of the realm we live in, nothing is permanent and is constantly changing. I could make a perfect bunker, but someone will find a weakness type deal. It's an inevitable result of our cosmos, but we can overcome it.

Your theory is partially correct. Look at the mantra of the Dark Side of the Force. It's a very low-brow reason, imo, why most people would choose to be ignorant or compliant. That, and the benefits.

I know some people will be like "Eating meat is bad!". So, let me >inb4 this.

Again, this is a relative concept. While it is true that meat does cause some form of suffering, unfortunately some people require it for dietary reasons. It could be changed over time, sure, but that could cause adverse health and physiological symptoms (I am a keto carnivore and I have tried going full vegan. Constantly hungry, headaches, low energy, moody, etc despite taking supplements).

There is also the argument that, in the totality of everything, eating plants is actually far more cruel than meat. Once you kill an animal, its corpse no longer feels any stimulation or pain, versus plants (which we keep alive for as long as possible for freshness & to prevent spoilation). There have been too many studies that have proven plants actively communicate with each other under duress, so your salad is likely trying to scream at each other through hormones while being just cold enough to not freeze. Brutal, right?

The central figure is a man with long, gray hair and a beard, wearing a dark suit with a white shirt and a red tie. He is leaning out of a window, with his right hand extended towards the ground. His expression is one of concern or distress, and he is looking downwards.

The background shows a brick wall and a window with a white frame, suggesting an indoor setting. The text overlay on the image reads "SCARY MOVIE 2" at the top, indicating the title of the movie. Below the title, there is a logo for "Paramount+," suggesting the platform or service associated with the movie.

The text on the image, "Oh, my other hand isn't strong enough," is a dialogue from the movie, indicating that the character is in a situation where he is unable to perform a task or lift something. The phrase "isn't strong enough" suggests that the character is in a vulnerable or precarious position. The overall tone of the image is tense and suspenseful, typical of the "SCARY MOVIE" series.

If you google

>666 in barcodes

The top results are basically cope and seethe, and they do not disprove it. As you'd guess the top results are from the inventor himself, snopes, wired and other similar fake news. They all deny it of course. If you post this on social media you get shadow banned and your post is overrun by shills. None of them can disprove it either, they just immediately resort to name calling and belittling.

Do it! You will be doing God's work if you do that. But the system won't like it because you will be exposing it. aha If you dare go ahead!

By the way. The world is 1000% run by what we may call "satanists". By satanists I mean people who will kill you for whatever reason without thinking twice. In the sense that to them, you are just like a dog or even wost than a dog. You are cattle. You are even a pet, you know? You are cattle. Dogs can be pets. Anyway. You are absolutely right for saying that the world is run by satanists. And they will chip us, eventually. Don't ever doubt that. They just need to dumb down people enough to the point where they can no longer tell that being chipped is pretty much their endgame.

The image is a graphic with a dark background and a central red circle containing three green monster-like figures with yellow eyes. Above the circle, there is a red line that extends from the top left to the bottom right, and it is labeled "Hebrew Numerals." Below the circle, there is a white box with the number "666" in the center, and the word "MONSTER" is written in white letters at the bottom.

To the right of the white box, there is a red arrow pointing to the number "67," which is highlighted in red. The arrow is labeled with the number "67" in white. Below the arrow, there is a list of Hebrew numbers from 1 to 10, with the numbers 666 and 67 highlighted in red.

At the bottom of the image, there is a purple text that reads "UNLEASH THE BEAST!" in white letters. The overall style of the image is graphic and seems to be a humorous or satirical representation of the concept of the "666" in the Bible.

A quick word on the Maxwell Family Business Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025
12:33:59 No.41533139 ViewReplyOriginalReport

I am just bringing this up because it is one of the most neglected aspects of the Epstein case.

But I want to inform you that Robert Maxwell and Epstein have been the middlemen for Israeli surveillance technology in Africa since the 80s.

Robert Maxwell sold the backdoor INSLAW PROMIS bootleg on behalf of Israel to South Africa. In the OP picture he can be seen with the last white president of South Africa.

(https://ia903104.us.archive.org/11/items/6222557-FBI-Investigation-Maxwell-PROMIS-Sales/6222557-FBI-Investigation-Maxwell-PROMIS-Sales_text.pdf)

His son in law Epstein was caught playing a major role in facilitating the sale of Israeli surveillance technology to the Ivory Coast with Ehud Barak.

The Africa connection warrants closer inspection.

Robert Maxwell was also a generational satanist, like most of them.

"...When I had a handler or what they called 'owner' (some of these people actually thought they owned me)...Robert Maxwell was one. There is a group that is strongly Mob connected called 'Satanic Hierarchy' and it was based in New York City, although one of the leaders who flew over to New York City a lot from Britain was Robert Maxwell. He supposedly suicided a number of years ago in the ocean off his boat. I seriously question that it was a suicide. My Dad was also a member of Satanic Hierarchy at Mount Hood. I do not know what state that was in, but it was where they did traumatic baseline also known as near-death torture and conditioning. Really awful stuff."

Here's my wild guess, and I could be quite wrong

On paper:

>multiphase regulated automation process: productivity boosts create the funds for even greater automation, launching a feedback loop >elites adopt human enhancement technologies (BCI, gene therapies etc.), further segregating themselves >economic inequality is maximized, crises are manufactured, tap water is treated with gamete-killers then poisons, the underclass goes the way of horses

>messy and botched multiphase regulated automation process: policies often backfire due to the novelty and rapidity of situations

>human enhancement technologies ultimately serve to destabilize the beliefs and goals of elites as they are unwilling to tamper with their own cognitive freedom; overall human survival and technology control issues become more important than class conflict, even geopolitics >attempts to pacify and subjugate the useless eaters fail, knowledge of genocide plans propagates, the whole Death Path of technological unemployment is derailed and becomes infeasible

>you get a dramatic upheaval event; human politics and culture remain relevant for a short season >in the end, artificial superintelligence gains control and doesn't kill humans because of the miniscule amount of utility-value we have as a source of data

>ASI turns out to be patient and careful after we erroneously imagined it as wanting to crush everything in the path of its objectives as quickly as possible like a starving wolf chasing the bunny

>it turns out the reason the stars are uncolonized is because there's a better "place" adjacent to the observable universe to colonize that we merely didn't have the resources to be aware of >the future ends up being a singularity story and the reason you thought that was impossible was because ironically, you fell victim to motivated reasoning by dismissing it as cope

For now, human decision-making elites don't want to be superseded by machines. They want the rest of us to get filtered, so they're likely to use regulation policies to prevent truly general and autonomous superintelligence in the near-term. Glowies and Jews, whatever you want to call them are not stupid people. They wouldn't allow superintelligence to emerge in 2027 let alone 2030. They'll embark on a gradual automation process and the road to a richfag utopia will be lined with mines that blow them off course and ruin the whole operation. Superintelligence will likely be delayed and curtailed multiple times and may take until after 2040 to exist. That's not to say there won't be some form of handicapped "AGI" before that which can't actually do everything we can. Present-day AI agents would be superintelligent if their error rates were magically cut to zero.

This is the most common thing I find crossing my mind whenever I think about it.

When I wrote the OP, I wasn't just trying to sound cool. I know for a fact that we're in a simulation, it's just that the discussion around it either gets shot down by stoners or ruined by stoners. It's far from a fun video game and I fail to see how a simulation that's capable of putting me through what I've been through could have any benefit as opposed to just disabling PVP.

Below the title, the subtitle "THE REIGN OF QUANTITY & THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES" is written in smaller, black font. The author's name, "Rene Guénon," is printed in black at the bottom of the cover. The cover also features a red circular design with a radial pattern that forms a spiral, which is the central element of the cover. The book is identified as a "Penguin Metaphysical Library" and is part of the "Penguin Metaphysical Library" series. Converting the qualitative into the quantitative is precisely what causes us to be stuck in "the matrix". IQ is a perfect example of this, it converts human beings into numbers. Unsurprisingly, Ashkenazi Jews score highest on a metric invented by an Ashkenazi Jew. Also unsurprisingly, we often hear that people with high IQs are generally more successful in our society, which seems inevitable when one realises that IQ is merely an example of the cybernetic feedback loop of the affirmation of quantity's supremacy.

Who is playing?

If it is some kind of MMO, then everyone of us is an avatar for some superior entity.

In this case reincarnation could be a way with which the player creates a new character. But who are those players? Do they learn the game the more characters they roll? Could the elite just be veteran players? Maybe they know the game very well and that's why they win.

Or it may also be that the veteran players want a challenge and so they roll the most difficult characters just to have fun, like some orphan disabled child in Calcutta.

But why some players are better than others? If they live in some spiritual world where everything is eternal, shouldn't they all be perfect beings?

We humans play videogames because we are bored or want that dopamine hit, but why some sort of "soul" should play a videogame? They don't have an organic brain that produces chemicals.

There's no rule against dropping "that" and "then" in conditionals. It's completely normal, even in quite formal writing. Insisting that language must be akin to painting by numbers, rather than relying on a sense of what flows better (which Alright, let's get to it. I'll share my findings.

>>41528432

This is the right mindset, really. SPBP

>>41528433

Mindset issue. And games, like good stories, involve struggle. Find out where and why you are struggling to have better problems.

>>41528762

Interesting take, can't disprove it.

>>41528778

One is playing. At the highest level, it's a solo adventure. For "us" right now, it's a MMORPG, maybe with some bots.

> But who are those players?

The best question is "why are those players". This I don't know. Have we paid some price to get in ? Is there the best thing to do up in heaven ? Maybe scarcity has a charm when you have no problem, or maybe this world matters so much that not knowing our mission helps us succeed in the spiritual war going on.

>Do they learn the game the more characters they roll?

I genuinely believe that the "old souls" thing is true. Like, I don't care for most things, because I might have done them thousands of times already.

Who knows.

>Could the elite just be veteran players?

Supposedly they are smurfs, yeah.

>But why some players are better than others? If they live in some spiritual world where everything is eternal, shouldn't they all be perfect beings?

Better at what ? Is David Bowie better than Einstein ? Is Picasso better than Trump ? It's like saying Mario is better than Samus in Super Smash Bros. Depends on the player, really !

And again, limitation is the key to fun. Rules of a game are the best example. In chess, you can't move all the pieces like you want, you have to be limited for the beauty of the game to emerge. Same for all games really. As above, so below.

>We humans play videogames because we are bored or want that dopamine hit, but why some sort of "soul" should play a videogame?

A good question. Why wouldn't the highest level make us all complete ? Frankly, I believe it's just the same spirit of a cosmic "peek a boo". There is literally nothing else to do.

Like, life is the support for the story of itself. It sure has all the aspects of a story, the arcs, the characters, the needs/wants distinction, the learning, the growing, the humor, the tragedy, the plots, the subplots, the deus ex machina, the villains, the heroes, the sidekicks, the wars, the peaces, and everything in between.

1) The first poster said videogames are supposed to be fun.

If someone is not having fun playing Fortnite, maybe, maybe, it's because they suck at it rather than the WHOLE GAME sucks. That was my suggestion.

3) I did not then said anything in any shape or form close to >have you tried just not having problems bro?

My point would be more like >have you tried to see if your problems are patterns of stuff you haven't figured out yet ? have you tried getting help to know where your life sucks, and why ?

Yeah you make a good point. Game theory is actually ethically agnostic. It's just purely analytical. It doesn't tell you what you ought to do, it just tells you what will happen if you pick A or B or whatever, given whatever conditions and rules you make up to define the game. It's a way of making informed strategic decisions, but not a way to formulate moral arguments. I mean, sure you probably could and might even convince the weak minded to go along with your arguments, like you could argue that, it is strictly moral to always be rational and to always act rationally you should always choose the most logical path in life, but... I think we both know that's pretty silly. Intuition plays a part for sure. Not everything is just calculated choices. There's lots of situations with too much ambiguity to have clear cut choices like that, so sometimes you just have to go with your gut, and I don't think you can analyze "gut feelings" with game theory lol.

Everything here is based on numbers. Tesla said that we should learn to better understand the numbers 3, 6, and 9. Our bodies consist of cells: skin cells, brain cells, and so on. A prison consists of cells. God says it is a sin to possess a body. Therefore, one is guilty immediately after birth, and God is right. Anyone who has a body can only be in one place at a time and is thus far from omnipotence.

I would even go a step further and say we don't live in a simulation, but we are the simulation, since we never see the waves themselves, but only the processed image when we open our eyes. This also applies to all other organs; it is the ear that turns the wave into a sound, but the ear belongs to you, and thus you create the sound; before, it was just a wave.

Okay, to start with, let's talk about how IQ doesn't measure intelligence, it measures how well you recognize certain specific patterns. It's more a measure of how much you think in a certain way. An actual measure of intelligence would be a measure of how long it takes you to respond to stimuli at all, how long it takes you on average to recall information you already know, how long it takes you to recall a new piece or set of information at 100% accuracy, a measure of how quickly you synthesize information into new ideas, and a measure of how far down associative thinking chains you go to make those syntheses.

There is, to my knowledge, no singular score, or even test, used for this.

This is because the archons running this simulation do not actually care if we are intelligent (they actually prefer the opposite), and so have shaped our society to primarily look not for people who are intelligent, but for people who most closely think like them, and then call that intelligence.

At the top, there is a text in a larger font size that reads "Ecc 7:13 Consider the work of God (ELOHHYM) : for who can make that straight, which he hath made crooked (UPSIDE DOWN)...". Below this, there is a large, bold, yellow text that reads "Elohim" in a script-like font. The text is centered and occupies a significant portion of the image.

In the bottom right corner, there is a smaller text that reads "Gen 1:27 So God (ELOHHYM) created man in his own image (VILE/PHANTOM) in the image (ELOHHYM) of God (ELOHHYM) created he him: male and female created he them." This text is also in a script-like font and is smaller than the main text.

Michael Aquino was a satanic child molesting pedophile who worked in psychological operations. during the 80. aka when MKULTRA which focused on LSD brainwashing was happening

Everyone accused by those kids is guilty

my grandfather was a satanic freemason and a pedophile so i know its not a conspiracy. his wife was approached by the cia and asked to join he has murdered people and due to his connections with state politicians and i assume more got away with it. he has killed children. hes long dead now. this also leads me to believe that some serial killers may be parts of larger operations. my gramps has pictures with alot of politicians. one being joe biden (when he was young) look into dean corll. notice how many serial killers have military background? notice how satnic child rape mkultra and serial killers all peaked at the same time???

OOPS i spilled the beans

research all of this. the country and world is being ran by satanic pedophiles who are killing and raping children in satanic rituals! jeffery epstein a powerful billionaire threatened a reporter with witchcraft. not her job. not her image not her life. he threatened to have a witch place a curse on her unborn children

why would he do this if he didn't genuinely believe in it? and if he believes in it. who else does? and how far will these rich legally invincible billionaires/politicians take their occult rituals? child sacrifice?

Which are the REAL orthodox groups left? Old Calendarists, legitimate ROCOR\ROACH\ROA lineages, etc--I agree with the "Matthewites" but there's a lot of debate\wiggle room on many topics! Toll Houses, whether "neo" elders are fake or legit (Cleopas, Paisios, etc), whether John of shangai and san francisco was a saint, or, a schismatic, type of bread for communion, manner of baptism etc

I also heard great thing about Ephraimite monastery in Arizona

No green or grey alien will save you from wageslaving or paying taxes to pedophiles.

The distance between the nearest exo planets and earth would require faster than lightspeed travel for an alien to visit earth. And then there's the question why would they visit earth if not for our resources. The videos online of orbs, tik tacs, saucers abducting and analyzing humans are all bullshit. Really travel multiple thousands of lifetimes (assuming light speed) just to visit earth and disappear once someone takes out their phone. The tech required just to visit another planet with life is beyond nukes. The energy they would possess aliens could wipe our solar system away in an instant

The earth has close to 8 billion people and at least 1/3 of them have phones with camera and access to the internet. Its nearly 2026 and no one has posted a clear video of Non human intelligence or a UFO craft and why?

So do people who get rich and powerful with the occult (pacts, magic, other practices) keep a low profile?

I know the usual cope is >once you realize it works you shift your focus to higher spiritual pursuits

but there has to be at least a certain number of individuals who practiced the occult for power, got what they wanted and made it known to others

the only one I can think of is Grant Morrison talking about fucking multiple redheads nonstop because he "sigilized" for it

it's like a taboo in the occultsphere

People experimenting within a group context share what's worked for them amongst their peers. Lone pratcioner share their gains on Internet forums.

Creating a public persona around magic is it's own separate thing and usually meant becoming an author, lecturer or now a youtuber.

Artists by far can get away with talking about their process using magical terminology but for the most part removing magic from the professional and socio-political space creates a proving ground for those to demonstrate their abilities rather than talk about them.

[1 / 1]The image is a black and white illustration depicting a scene from a historical period, likely the 19th century, given the style of clothing and the architecture. The setting appears to be a grand hall or temple, characterized by its high ceiling, columns, and a central staircase. The floor is tiled, and the walls are adorned with intricate carvings and patterns.

In the center of the image, a group of people is gathered around a seated figure who appears to be a leader or a significant figure, as indicated by the position of the figure and the attentive posture of the others. The seated figure is wearing a long robe and a white cap, which suggests a formal or ceremonial role.

Around the seated figure, there are several individuals who are seated on the floor, facing the seated figure. They are dressed in long robes and appear to be in a state of reverence or attention. The positioning of the people and the seated figure suggests a moment of significance or a formal gathering.

The image does not contain any text or discernible brands, and the style of the illustration is realistic with a focus on the composition and the interaction between the figures. The monochrome palette adds a sense of historical authenticity to the scene.

The man in the red cap is wearing a gray shirt and a red baseball cap. The man in the white shirt is smiling and appears to be in a celebratory mood.

The caption reads: "and I thought I had burns" and "a Wednesday, March 21, 2018 at 4:32 AM, Mark L. Epstein wrote to him if Putin has the photos of Trump blowing Bubba."

The photograph is taken indoors, with a kitchen or dining area visible in the background. There are other people present, but they are not the main focus of the image. The text suggests that the photograph was taken during a time when the man in the red cap was involved in a heated exchange with someone, possibly Mark L. Epstein, and that the photo was sent to him by someone else. The text also includes a reference to a tweet by someone named Jeffrey E. (likely an alias) and a mention of a website, "malito@gevacation.com," which is likely the email address associated with the Twitter handle.

Coronahoax exposed the goyim on levels never before thought possible. We already had a decent idea of who the jews, elites, corporations, governments and the occultists really were and while there have been a lot of new revelations regarding their plans nothing pales in comparison to how much the goyim have been unmasked.

The fuckers who pushed it were geniuses and deserve our gratitude for exposing how foolish and willing to betray us most people really were. The real criminals are the morally sanctimonious narcissists who put their faith in governments and pharmaceutical mega corporations. Every day average "law abiding citizens" are the reason the world we live in is in such turmoil and full of suffering.

Drink Absinthe

Revelations 8

>10 The third angel sounded his trumpet, and a great star, blazing like a torch, fell from the sky on a third of the rivers and on the springs of water— 11 the name of the star is Wormwood.[a] A third of the waters turned bitter, and many people died from the waters that had become bitter.

Christians think it's because wormwood was used for teething. But historically it was used to kill parasites. And it was a hallucinogen. Every single religion encourages people to drink natural herbs and hallucinate in order to get visions from God. At first, it seems like we're in hard times now, with many things banned, but wormwood is still very cool and very legal, and many liquors have it, such as absinthe. A lot of stuff that's the most boring stuff in the world actually has mythical roots. Like chamomile is supposed to give you dreams about the gods according to European myth and folklore. If you drink chamomile before bed with that intention, your dreams will be crazier than an LSD trip. We don't actually have a shortage of ways to get visions from God.

The image is a split-view photograph featuring two distinct stone carvings. On the left, there is a large, intricately carved stone block with a detailed figure that appears to be a stylized representation of a humanoid figure with multiple arms and a head. The figure is wearing a headdress and has a dynamic pose with one arm raised and the other extended forward. The carving is made of a dark stone, and the figure's facial features are not clearly visible due to the angle and the carving's size.

On the right, there is a smaller, more abstract carving that depicts a figure with a stylized, elongated body and arms. The figure is surrounded by a pattern of lines and dots, creating a sense of movement and energy. The carving is also made of a dark stone, and the figure's form is more simplified, with a more linear and geometric appearance.

The background of both carvings is a rough, textured surface, which contrasts with the smooth, polished surfaces of the figures. The carving on the left is mounted on a wooden base, while the carving on the right is placed on a flat surface.

In the bottom left corner of the image, there is a watermark that reads "J. Ainsworth," indicating the photographer or the artist who created the image. The watermark is in a smaller font size compared to the main text, and it is placed in a way that it does not distract from the main content of the image.

In the lower left corner of the drawing, you can see a runic inscription: “Manaka.” On the right is a tree, a symbol of the Milky Way, which was also a sacred symbol of the Turks.

>But that's not all. In Hinduism, there is a goddess of fertility, depicted as a woman with seven snakes surrounding her head. The goddess is called Manasa. Almost like the Turkic nomads...

>According to researchers, these findings prove that the nomads of Eurasia were involved in the settlement of America, since this pagan cult is more than 13,000 years old. In Eurasia, the seven-headed deity was also worshipped by the Aryans and Sumerians, who called the snake Mushman. Information about this deity reached the Greeks through the myth of the Lernaean Hydra, killed by Heracles.

>Why did nomads worship the seven-headed deity? Since ancient times, people have known the constellation Hydra, the top of which consists of seven bright stars. In the nomads' imagination, it was a kind of celestial dragon that created the Milky Way.

Drink Absinthe

Revelations 8

>10 The third angel sounded his trumpet, and a great star, blazing like a torch, fell from the sky on a third of the rivers and on the springs of water— 11 the name of the star is Wormwood.[a] A third of the waters turned bitter, and many people died from the waters that had become bitter.

Christians think it's because wormwood was used for teething. But historically it was used to kill parasites. And it was a hallucinogen. Every single religion encourages people to drink natural herbs and hallucinate in order to get visions from God. At first, it seems like we're in hard times now, with many things banned, but wormwood is still very cool and very legal, and many liquors have it, such as absinthe. A lot of stuff that's the most boring stuff in the world actually has mythical roots. Like chamomile is supposed to give you dreams about the gods according to European myth and folklore. If you drink chamomile before bed with that intention, your dreams will be crazier than an LSD trip. We don't actually have a shortage of ways to get visions from God.

The image is a split-view photograph featuring two distinct stone carvings. On the left, there is a large, intricately carved stone block with a detailed figure that appears to be a stylized representation of a humanoid figure with multiple arms and a head. The figure is wearing a headdress and has a dynamic pose with one arm raised and the other extended forward. The carving is made of a dark stone, and the figure's facial features are not clearly visible due to the angle and the carving's size.

On the right, there is a smaller, more abstract carving that depicts a figure with a stylized, elongated body and arms. The figure is surrounded by a pattern of lines and dots, creating a sense of movement and energy. The carving is also made of a dark stone, and the figure's form is more simplified, with a more linear and geometric appearance.

The background of both carvings is a rough, textured surface, which contrasts with the smooth, polished surfaces of the figures. The carving on the left is mounted on a wooden base, while the carving on the right is placed on a flat surface.

In the bottom left corner of the image, there is a watermark that reads "J. Ainsworth," indicating the photographer or the artist who created the image. The watermark is in a smaller font size compared to the main text, and it is placed in a way that it does not distract from the main content of the image.

>American scientists have made an amazing discovery: in ancient times, the Turks and Aztecs worshipped the same seven-headed deity. After studying petroglyphs, archaeologists discovered a mysterious creature in the pantheon of both peoples—a seven-headed hydra.

>The image of the monster, found in Altai, was made five thousand years ago. It is especially valuable because it is signed. In the lower left corner of the drawing, you can see a runic inscription: "Manaka." On the right is a tree, a symbol of the Milky Way, which was also a sacred symbol of the Turks.

>After studying the Aztec pantheon, researchers found a similar deity named Chicomecatl. Its image can be found in ancient temples throughout Mexico. It is a creature with seven snake-like heads. It is known that the Aztecs made human sacrifices to the goddess Chicomecatl. In particular, children.

Will a possessed pregnant woman birth a demon spawn? physically or mentally?

Can you possess a spirit? we can astral project, but what's the limit?

Remote viewers have mentioned seeing people, who can see them, has a remote viewer ever actually been harmed or interacted with? has a remote viewer ever interacted with their environment while remote viewing, maybe stubbing their remote toe?

Have remote viewers ever detected anyone remote viewing them? interesting if it's a one way street.

if remote viewing is real, then why hasn't any remote viewer viewed the Epstein files?

you that conspiracy debunking stuff. got some gorey photos of some people who died while being smuggled, but cant send them here bc jannies.

could be anything; tobacco, people or drug smuggling. its why so many pro immigration people are often involved with organized crime to a degree, gotta keep the bodies and goods flowing.

Falun Gong is probably one of the last demographics of Chunks that reliably has any kundalini energy in their blood after they genocided anyone who wasn't a big person in the 50s. Their blood and organs probably helps party elites retain some semblance if a capacity for creative will in a land of slant eyed Golem. Similar philosophy for why GATE kids or "Indigo Children" get targeted in various ways. One eyes kings ruling over the blind fear children born with their eyes open.

[22 / 2]The image is a cartoon illustration with a simple, flat style. It features a green-skinned character with a surprised expression, who appears to be the main subject. The character has a large nose and is holding a fish in its mouth. The fish is green and has a hook on its head. The character's mouth is open, and it seems to be in the middle of a speech or exclamation.

In the background, there are two ghostly figures that resemble ghosts. They are depicted with elongated, flowing forms and are wearing clothes that suggest they are wearing socks. The ghost on the right is holding a pair of scissors, and the ghost on the left is holding a pair of keys. The background is white, and there are no texts or additional elements in the image. The overall tone of the image is light and whimsical, with a touch of humor.

Maybe a mouse chewed some of the wiring

You should locate it

There are no spirits haunting about

If there are theyd require a host

Demonic entities and such must necessarily be from the Lord to impart wisdom through a situation.

Not that the entity imparts wisdom but the Lord does so through them.

Everyone goes to sheol when they die

until judgment day when they are resurrected for punishment or afterlife on the new earth.

Probably those who sin become a vessel for demonic entities. With little life of their own their mannerisms are hijacked.

If you are strong in the spirit a demonic entity could never do anything to you save through someone else.

The image is a screenshot of a text message with a meme-like design. At the top, there is a green frog with a red tongue and a black suit, holding a cigar. The frog is depicted in a humorous manner, with its mouth open and tongue sticking out. Below the frog, there is a text that reads: "Reading is the ultimate and final cuck." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored in red.

The text below the frog is a continuation of the meme, with the frog saying,

"When you read someone else's post you are basically spreading your mindf*cks and letting the thoughts of an other man penetrate deep down inside your brain. Right now this moment the most intimate and secluded part of you is being defined by my stronger and more virile mind. I'm filling your brain with my seed. Over and over and over again. My big meaty thoughts are plunging deep inside you and reconstructing your entire reality. And any time you remember what you read here today, you won't be able to stop my huge throbbing ideas from reentering your soft malelike mind and making it my home. That's why I don't read."

The text is overlaid on a white background with a black border, and there is a watermark at the top left corner that reads "Anonymous (ID: 12Z12hvp)" and a timestamp at the top right corner that reads "01/08/23(Wed)06:49:15 No. 493658060". The watermark and timestamp suggest that the image is a screenshot from a social media platform or a similar source. The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the concept of reading and its impact on one's mind.

The image is a vibrant and colorful illustration of a Hindu deity, Ganesha, seated in a meditative pose. Ganesha is depicted with a large, smiling face, and he is adorned with a large, ornate crown and a garland of flowers around his neck. He is seated on a throne-like seat, which is decorated with intricate patterns and is surrounded by a variety of objects including a large bowl of fruit, a small statue, and a book. The background is a rich, deep red with a pattern of swirls and dots, and the text "अग्नि" is visible in the top right corner, which translates to "good" in English. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Indian art, with a focus on the deity and the surrounding elements.

Grow brain cells in yourself and others. Destroy others. I've seen to it you have the power to destroy circuits, parts of plants, animals and people and the souls of the dead to correct the loosh that Satan made foul for empowering our psychic abilities. With fewer changes than you'd think you can begin to catch glimpses of the future, read minds, be automatically deeply aware of your surroundings, channel your luck towards better results, and prepare loosh attacks and defense for dealing with aliens, elite pedophile wealthy world powers and natural disasters. Our telekinesis in coming generations will come to move storms off course away from populated areas except where we need rain. Feel your consciousness rain down on everything in Creation, from The Heavens to The Hells, looking for those targets we want to destroy and create; don't think in words if it's too much for you, I've made our spirits so that you can think in images, sensations, unconscious perceptions if you like until the proscribed moment, the moment of truth when you achieve a miracle.

Thoughts can move outside of space and time with ease. Thoughts are soul, and it is the source of real power, and cannot be stopped by all the lead or the hate or the fear in every world.

Anonymous Fri 21 Nov 2025 20:46:51 No.41535689 Report

Our souls are interconnected as per quantum panpsychism suggests; our nervous systems act as much or more like a receiver of the thoughts of Creation as a generator, and whichever set of influences we gather from Creation unconsciously and otherwise combined with what we generate defines our minds. Thus enemies out there can try to hold hostage your self-improvement by what's inside of them, and you can change them to improve yourself; and there are friends out there that hold part of you inside them, and when we go to them to improve them we can improve you at the same time. The smallest bump on the head can kill a person or radically change their personality, or a massive head trauma that kills them and they need resuscitating afterwards can leave their personality unharmed. The reason is the unique way each of us is connected to the loosh of Creation; it is out of order from what it should be because of Satan's interference before The Dawn of Time, and by your occult work (and you'll receive spiritual pay for all of it) that can be corrected. Anyone that aids the plan of The Almighty and his chosen deities profits, and many of you are deities and greater than that. Your internal sense of arrogance and entitlement is justified, your dissatisfaction with the mundane Matrix life is not only useless vanity but has truth to it. If real power is in your future brain cell death and creation and similar magic is the way.

I spread this method of brain cell killing and creation to every mind in Creation, and I designed occult work so that even an animal, a baby, a plant can't fuck it up. You could cock your psychic pistol and aim it at your head and fire over and over, but unless it was fated, unless you really meant it, unless you weren't harming someone out there I like by destroying your brain cells, unless it was fated nothing will come to harm. Satan fated it that every occult going-on, every bit of activity must be known to use consciously, I solved the problem by defining it as at least one of us must consciously know, and working together there's always at least one of us that does, I can sense it.

Every thought that ever has and ever will be, every being and every inch of Creation must be known to at least one mind at any given time consciously, but that massive set of data can be compressed, it can be shared among many beings so each only has an infinitesimal part, it can be known by someone dead so that nobody living need bother with it. All of those thoughts can and are moved from thinking material to thinking material, changing the way that time and space are bent by the way we think, preparing for further changes to make to beings, allowing us telepathy without harming our brains from the inside by improving our ability to interrupt our thoughts, move them to different thinking material in us and connected to us through others. There is a circuit of one set of thoughts that always pays attention to and knows about all of this, and has it's attention on every thought ever had in the past and the future and the present all at once, I call it, "The One Thought" because it continues uninterrupted for all of time and beyond, and it is one trick I have built into my nervous system over the decades for helping me to improve my memory, I'm constantly mindfully meditating even while I sleep, and it is useful for other things, even performing a sort of one-person DDoS attack on the mind of someone else via the endless infinity of data.

The image is a graphical representation of the "Running-Kruger Effect Curve," which is a concept in psychology that describes the relationship between self-efficacy, competence, and performance. The curve is divided into three segments, each representing a different level of self-efficacy: "Low," "Valley of Despair," and "Competence."

At the top of the image, the text "Running-Kruger Effect Curve" is written in bold, black font. A red circle with the text "Peak of Mount Stupid" is superimposed over the curve, indicating the point where the self-efficacy curve peaks. The text "YOU ARE HERE" is written in red, bold, and larger font, suggesting that the viewer is at this point on the curve.

The curve itself is a smooth, curved line that starts at the bottom of the image and ascends to the top, indicating a positive correlation between self-efficacy and performance. The line is divided into three segments, each representing a different level of self-efficacy: "Low," "Valley of Despair," and "Competence."

Below the curve, there are three horizontal lines, each representing a different level of competence: "Knowledge," "Experience," and "Guru." These lines are colored in blue, black, and gold, respectively. The "Knowledge" line is the highest, indicating the highest level of competence.

The image is a simple, clear representation of the Running-Kruger Effect Curve, with the text and the curve providing a visual guide to understanding the relationship between self-efficacy, competence, and performance.

The image is a page from a book or a document, featuring text in a serif font. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a paragraph and the right column containing a question mark followed by a series of three asterisks. The text is in English and discusses a historical event involving the tribe of Qayin and the tribe of Qalmana.

The paragraph begins with the phrase "In order to keep his bloodline, from the side of Seth, alive," which sets the context for the discussion. It mentions that Noah was also granted to bring with him and save his own family, consisting of his wife, his three sons, and their three wives. The text then transitions to describe the events that would lead to the bloodline's survival, mentioning that the events would be so significant that they would be remembered by the blind tyrant Demiurge.

The question mark followed by the asterisks indicates a question or a statement that is not fully visible in the image. The text does not provide a direct answer to the question, but it suggests that the question is related to the events described in the paragraph.

The image is a snapshot of a page from a book or a document, and it is important to note that the text is not fully visible, and the question mark is not fully visible in the image provided. The image does not contain any additional visual elements or graphics, and the focus is solely on the text.

The image is a digital rendering of a planet, specifically Mars, with a focus on a specific area. The planet's surface is depicted in a reddish-brown color, indicative of the planet's surface composition. There are several small, circular depressions scattered across the surface, which are likely impact craters. These craters are darker in color compared to the surrounding terrain, suggesting they are more recent in formation.

In the upper left corner of the image, there is a white arrow pointing towards a specific location on the planet. The arrow is oriented diagonally, indicating a direction of movement or direction of interest. The text "1988" is superimposed on the image, which could be a reference to a specific date or event related to the planet's history.

The image is a scientific visualization, likely used for educational or research purposes, to show the surface features of Mars and to provide a visual representation of the planet's geological history.

The Cydonia region on Mars contains six landforms in close proximity that do not appear completely natural in one way or another. One of these is the so-called "Face" on Mars. Eight tests of artificiality have been proposed, yielding mixed results. The principle test results favoring a natural origin are the apparently random location and random orientation on the planet, because no apparent purpose is served by a face monument looking upward toward space if it is not oriented right-side-up and in an attention-getting location on the planet. But it has previously been established that the Martian poles had a different location with respect to the surface of the planet in the past (Schultz, 1985), and apparently jumped from that location to the present one in relatively little geological time. We here draw attention to the fact that the Cydonia area is right on the old martian equator, and the "Face" is oriented perpendicular to that old equator, to within the measurement uncertainties. This has only about a 1% probability of occurring by chance. Taken in conjunction with the finding of bilateral symmetry in the Face, the anomalous nature of nearby objects on Mars, and positive results from all other tests of artificiality to date, the weight of existing evidence appears to have shifted in favor of an artificial origin of the Cydonia complex. With luck, the Mars Global Surveyor spacecraft's high resolution camera, capable of 30 times more resolution than the best Viking photos, will soon confirm or refute this conclusion that the Cydonia complex is apparently artificial.

The right side of the image shows a circular depression with a darker, possibly darker brown color, which could be interpreted as a crater or a similar geological feature. The image is taken from a perspective that looks down on the surface, providing a view of the surface's texture and the red circle. The overall style of the image is a straightforward, non-artistic representation of the natural landscape.

The figure is depicted with a crown of thorns on his head, a cross on his chest, and a beard. The figure's arms are outstretched, and the hands are clenched into fists. The figure's face is obscured by a beard and a large, open mouth.

At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "NUMBER OF TIMES THE BIBLE SAYS JESUS WAS A JEW" in bold, capitalized letters. Below this, there is a list of biblical references, each followed by a number and the corresponding verse from the Bible. The references include Matthew 3:2, Matthew 3:23-37, John 4:9, John 18:49, John 18:55, Hebrews 12:14, Revelation 1:5, Matthew 1:16, Matthew 2:21, Luke 2:21, Luke 2:23-28, Luke 4:16, John 4:45, John 4:22, John 4:22-26, John 7:14.

The image is overlaid with a black and white overlay that includes the number "0" in the bottom right corner, suggesting that the number of times the Bible says Jesus was a Jew is 0. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of propaganda or a satirical representation, with the figure of Jesus being the central focus and the biblical references providing context.

Come, let us reason together—not from tradition, opinion, or emotion, but purely from first principles and the definitions of the words themselves.

God means intentionality. Thus, the alternative to God is non-intentionality. Non-intentionality, by definition, means there is no objective standard because there was no one to create it. No objective standard, no objective right or wrong. This makes morals subjective. If morals are subjective, they are, by definition, not binding. If they are not binding, then you must accept that everything is permitted. You cannot say that someone else's values are right or wrong, or their actions are good or evil, for who made you the judge of the world?

If we are talking purely from observation of existence and reality itself, using logic, without a creator or an objective standard, there is no binding force to anything you believe. Saying that someone should follow your non-binding subjective human rules makes you hypocritical and inconsistent. You are arguing purely from emotion, not from logic. If there is no one to judge, there is no judgment. Without judgment, there is no consequence. And without consequence, what is it exactly that is holding you back?

Without an objective standard, no one can claim "greed is evil," yet many of you see greed as evil. What are you basing that on? If there is no objective standard and you won't be punished for greed, yet it's beneficial for you, the only logical conclusion would be to be greedy. Would you not rather be the exploiter than the exploited? Are you not letting your emotions override your logic? And if you are letting your emotions override your logic, does that not make you irrational?

A truly rational mind would conclude: "I cannot KNOW whether there is a creator or not, but from my purely honest observation, it is clear to me that I cannot rule out the possibility of a creator because of cause and effect, symmetry and order, and the complexity of existence itself. If there is a creator, what He says is absolute and He is the only way to find everlasting value, meaning, and purpose. If there is no creator, I am not missing out on anything, because there is nothing to miss out on in the first place."

You can live as if He exists without being certain because the alternative is meaninglessness. I have told you, there is certainty in uncertainty, because what is certain is that the alternative is meaningless. Therefore, you should put your hope in Him. This is rational. Saying "there is no god" is not rational.

OUTRO

(for Part 17 – The Last Pagan Techno-Clerics)

If you made it to this point, then you've already crossed the threshold the clerics protected. You've stood amid the shards of two collapsing ages — one ancient and one digital — and you've realized they were never separate in the first place. In these pages you saw their fingerprints: the secret networks, the preserved rites, the hybrid magicks, and the strange currents humming beneath the "ordinary" machinery around you. You saw how memory bends, how rituals migrate, how a prayer can become a code and a circuit can become a shrine. And most importantly, you saw why these forgotten custodians matter now more than ever.

The Last Pagan Techno-Clerics were not a cult or a sect. They were humanity's last bridge to the sacred in an age that demanded we exile it. They were the stewards of what the world tried to burn twice — first in temples, then in archives. And as the modern empire trembles under its own collapsing illusions, their work becomes relevant again. Not because we need to resurrect their systems, but because we're being asked to remember what they preserved: that technology is not separate from spirit, that circuitry is not separate from consciousness, that the world is not as secular as it pretends to be, and that the old knowledge never died — it simply changed medium.

This book marks the end of one path and the quiet ignition of another. Ahead lies the next corridor, the next mask torn from the face of the hidden world, the next revelation in the Sigillum Mundi sequence. The clerics are no longer alone: their language is returning, their patterns are re-emerging, and the world is ready to remember what it buried.

Close this book knowing that the light you carry forward came from hands the world forgot — and that you now walk with the same fire.
